Agriculture in Action

KELLOGG FOOD BOOST
We wouldn't presume to allow an air of commercialization to creep into our verbal ramblings.
Nor would we, without good and just cause, be guilty of plugging a television program of one sort or another.
But farmers and food industry people should be alerted to the sterling job which a certain nationally-renowned company is doing to reach the public with the dramatic story behind U. S. food bargains.
For the fourth consecutive year, the Kellogg Company of Battle Creek, Michigan, is conducting a special promotion entitled "Food Is A Bargain". The theme is being used in the fall advertising program, which has been greatly expanded for 1964.

And how are they going about it? Just sit down in front of your television set. Or keep your radio running for awhile. Or peruse some of the colorful promotional banners at your local grocery store. Or look carefully over a corn flakes package put out by the folks from Battle Creek.
You'll see (or hear) famed folks like Homer and Jethro, the Beverly Hillbillies, and other top stars, expounding on how the farmer and others on down the food line help our nation's citizens set the best dinner table in the world for the world's lowest cost.

Be your own judge. But it seems to us that the Kellogg Company promotion is going far beyond a mere effort to sell corn flakes. The project stands apart in the effective manner in which it portrays the unprecedented American story of food abundance from farm to table.
Farm Bureau has long labored to tell the same story, and welcomes this support from another member of the American food family.
