Agriculture in Action

SOUTH RISING AGAIN

There is evidence, say Confederate friends, that the South is going to rise again.

Well, agriculturally anyhow. But we're not going to rise this time as secessionists. We'll be on the upward grade because our farmers have molded themselves into a united group of joiners and doers.

Take the recent commodity referenda, for instance.

On December 15, 1964 flue-cured tobacco growers gave their leaf quota program the most resounding vote of approval ever. So effectively did they rally to the cause that they could leave no doubt as to their sentiments about this key program. The echoes of his unprecedented vote should stand growers in good stead should anyone desire to kick the props out from under them.

Withering ballot box strength was also shown in the backing given the 1965 cotton quota program, and the assessment and promotional programs for peanuts and tobacco.

There's other vivid evidence of our growing strength and unity. The American Farm Bureau Federation, largest of the nation's general farm organizations, announced in December that its ranks had swelled to record proportions. The membership tally stands at 1,647,455 farm families—a gain of 19,160 over last year.

A dissection of this gain reveals an interesting story. The Northeastern Region of the American Farm Bureau showed a small gain, 2,245 of the new memberships. The Midwestern Region helped out too, but was responsible for only 3,376 new farm family members. The Southern Region, however, recorded a whopping majority of the increase by posting 15,631 new memberships!

Unity is the stuff of which Southern farm progress will be made. It's a fact that we grow some peculiar crops around these parts, such as cotton, peanuts and flue-cured tobacco. We put a lot of stock in them. Farmers from other parts of the nation have their minds on other crops, however, and they vastly outnumber us. So do their lawmakers. Our recourse is togetherness. And the only way is up, if we keep this up.

active in Rotary Club work and is a member of the Cleveland County and North Lake Country Clubs. He and his wife, the former Sara Esther Dover, have two children, Jay (Jack Jr.) and Laney. His interest in education was recognized state-wide in 1960 when he was selected as a member of the Committee of 100 for Better Schools by the N. C. School Boards Association.

Couple Honored After Rehearsal

Miss Margie Nell Bowen and Douglas Wilson Moss, who were wed Sunday, cut their wedding cake Saturday night at an after-rehearsal party held at Westover clubhouse.

Mr. and Mrs. Cyrus L. Bowen, parents of the bride-to-be were hosts for the party.

Green and white provided a decorative color note on the bride's table and throughout the dining hall. Overlaid with white over green, the bride's table held a three-tier white and green wedding cake as central decoration. The engaged pair cut and served the cake and Mrs. Clarence Compton poured green punch.

The bride-elect wore a pink wool suit with black accessories. She and her fiancé took the occasion to present their gifts to members of the wedding party.

G-W Chairmen Are Named

BOILING SPRINGS—John V. (Jack) Schweppe, manager of Pittsburgh Plate Glass Co.'s Carolina plant and Jack G. Vincent, vice-president and general manager of Dover Mills will serve as co-chairmen of the committee for solicitation of the Gardner-Webb College Board of Advisors, announces R. Patrick Spangler, chairman of the 60th anniversary phase of the Decade of Advancement Program.

This announcement by Spangler comes on the heels of the acceptance by John R. Dover, III of the position of Convocation chairman. Dover is director of industrial relations for the Dover Textile Group.

Spangler and Dr. E. Eugene Poston, president of Gardner-Webb College, expressed appreciation that two men of this stature in Cleveland County had agreed to assist in the program and said it adds to growing confidence in the success of the advancement program.
