Farmland Prices Continue Up

As the saying goes, land is no longer dirt cheap.

And judging by recent farmland prices, the saying is getting truer each year.

Dr. Dale Hoover, an economist at North Carolina State, says U. S. farmland prices have risen in 27 of the last 30 years. Increases have averaged 6 per cent annually since 1933.

The biggest increase came at the height of World War II (1943-44), when farmland prices jumped 17 per cent in a single year. Another spurt came during the Korean War (1951-52) when prices jumped 13 per cent.

The biggest of the three decreases came in 1948-49, and the drop then was only 4 per cent.

Hoover points out that farmland prices rise in some regions much more rapidly than they do in others. In North Carolina, for example, land prices reached their 1920 peak in 1945. By contrast, land prices in South Dakota are still below the 1920 level.

Since 1955-57, land prices in the South and West have risen nearly 10 per cent more than those in the rest of the nation.

Several southern states experienced a 10 per cent gain in 1963, while prices in Maine dropped 2 per cent.

"Land prices of a particular area reflect the agricultural potential and the condition of associated farm buildings," Hoover explained. "Cutover woodland in some areas may sell for $50 an acre while irrigated citrus orchard land may sell for $4,000 or more per acre."

Figures show that the average value of farmland in the U.S. in November 1963 was $135 per acre. The average for North Carolina was about $210.

Hoover points out that figures on farmland prices must be interpreted carefully. Less than 2 per cent of all U.S. farmland is sold in any one year. And this land may be so varied that comparisons are difficult.

Also, Hoover points out, farmland prices cannot be understood apart from other prices. While farmland prices have been increasing 6 per cent annually over the past 30 years, stock prices have been increasing nearly 7 per cent.

On the other hand, farmland prices have risen at a faster rate than wholesale prices and consumer prices.

Farm Loans Now Available

A new program of small loans coupled with management assistance is now available to farm families and rural residents with limited income in Cleveland County, John E. Davis, County Supervisor for the Farmers Home Administration said today.

These loans are made available by the Economic Opportunity Act. Loans up to $2500 are available to farm families with limited income who cannot qualify for financial assistance under the regular loan program of the Farmers Home Administration or private lenders. These loans are aimed at helping farm and rural families earn more income from their own enterprises.

Loans to farmers may be made for the purchase of livestock, machinery and equipment, to construct or repair farm buildings, pay annual operating expenses, for seed and fertilizer, to refinance real estate debts and purchase a small acreage of land. To construct for loans to finance an agricultural enterprise, an applicant must be a farmer and must have earnings that are too low to cover basic needs for family living.

In addition to loans to farmers, special measures provided by the 88th Congress allow loans to be made to rural residents with limited earnings to develop new sources of income. These loans include long term loans to finance the development of a small family business that will increase family income. Funds may be advanced for such purposes as machinery repair shops, machinery for custom work, small barber or beauty shops, home production of handicrafts, rugs, etc., and a variety of other income producing facilities.

These Economic Opportunity loans will range up to $2500 and will carry an interest rate of 4 1/2 percent with up to 15 years to repay.

Application may be made or additional information obtained under the loan program of the Economic Opportunity Act at the Farmers Home Administration office, New County Office Building, Highway No. 180.

Cotton Facts Are Reported

RALEIGH Cotton facts as reported by the cotton fiber testing laboratory of the N. C. Department of Agriculture show many characteristics to be high in the final summary figures on North Carolina's 1964 cotton crop.

In a report from the department's engineering section, Charles Elks, section head, said indications from many areas of the state show good fiber characteristics.

The final report summarizes the state's cotton quality, and comprises finding printed in 13 reports mailed to over 800 manufacturers in the textile industry, and cotton buyers and handlers throughout the Southeast. The reports also go to county extension chairmen for information dissemination to farmers.

The summary indicated that cotton coming from the 46 county producing area of the state was generally average in the fine-to-coarse ratio measured by Micronaire instruments. Other fiber test results were shown by the Caustic instrument to show some immaturity.

Samples tested totaled 3,590, representing some 322,100 samples of cotton classed under the Smith-Doxey Program. The N.C. DA laboratory cooperates with the cotton division, Agricultural Marketing service, U. S. Department of Agriculture in securing samples for tests from some 245
