HOUSE BACKS PROPS
The subject of funds for the price support program on flue-cured tobacco prompted a lively congressional floor debate recently, as the House considered the 1966 USDA appropriations bill.

What got the skirmish started was an amendment proposed by Congressman John D. Dingell of Michigan. It went like this: "No part of any funds appropriated by this Act for the Commodity Credit Corporation shall be used by such Corporation to carry out any price support program for tobacco."

Then, referring to the controversial smoking-health report of the U.S. Surgeon General's special advisory committee, the Detroit lawmaker said, "I am asking my colleagues in the House to support my amendment, which says that the Federal Government has no business engaging in supporting prices, in conducting market-making programs, which would benefit a substance which is obviously as harmful to our people as is tobacco."

North Carolina Congressman Harold D. Cooley didn't agree. He charged that the amendment was "an effort to destroy the livelihood of hundreds of thousands of our citizens."

Cooley said that the statistics in the Surgeon General's report were "based on speculation and conjecture," and urged that comprehensive research on the subject be undertaken. He also pointed out that tobacco taxes have yielded over $52 billion to federal and state money bins, while the leaf program has cost the federal government only $38 million.

"When we relate the $52 billion to the $38 million, we can see how negligible our losses have been," said Cooley.

Congressman James Corman of California then came back at Cooley. "What we are faced with now," Corman said, "is a government that is willing, on the one hand, to spend money on a search to prove that smoking is a major cause of disease and an unequivocal health hazard and, on the other hand, a Government that is willing to expend funds to protect the tobacco industry from possible financial loss."

Corman asked the House to "let the tobacco industry fend for itself."

The House didn't see fit to do that, and rejected the proposed amendment.

Others who rose on the floor to attack Dingell's amendment were Rep. Horace Kornegay (D-N. C.), Rep. William Natcher (D-Ky.), Rep. Jamie Whitten (D-Miss.), and Rep. Vernon Thompson (R-Wisc.).

LABOR'S "WANTED MAN"
Included in the mouthful that President Johnson put to Congress in his recent labor message was this far-reaching afterthought tucked down toward the end:

"Finally, with the hope of reducing conflicts in our national labor policy that for years have divided Americans in various States, I recommend the repeal of Section 14(b) of the Taft-

Hartley Act with such other technical changes as are made necessary by this action."

Now, let's chew on that mouthful for just a moment. It may prove to be a bit hard to digest if we bolt it down outright setting our teeth into what is being proposed.

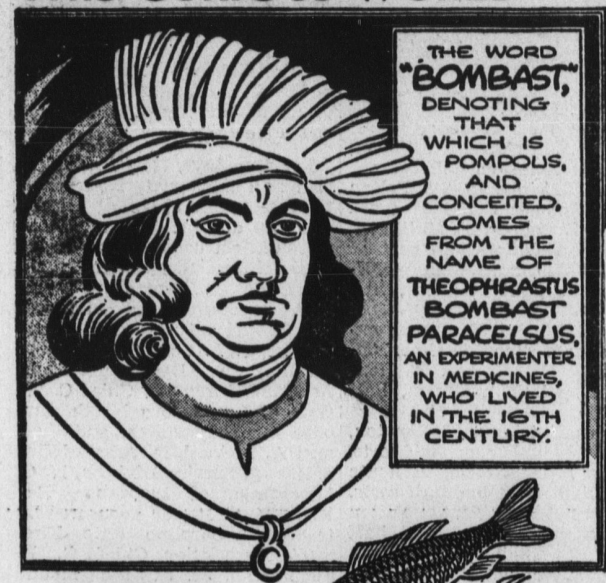

Section 14(b) is a 44-word portion of the Taft-Hartley Act which authorizes States to pass "right-to-work" laws. In the twenty States which have such laws, workers can't be pressured into union membership if they don't want to join. Further, they can't easily be deprived of the right to work if they refuse to knuckle under to the union "invitation." North Carolina has such a law, as authorized under Section 14(b).

Note, if you please, the sole reason which President Johnson gives for wanting to scuttle Section 14(b). He wants to reduce "conflicts in our national labor policy."

But why destroy the right of one State to have a labor law which differs from another? Why take another step into the quagmire of government-enforced sameness? Is this discrepancy in labor laws, under the President's definition, another case of "extremism"? This drab middle-ground of conformity is going to get rather crowded if the administration has its way.

It could be, of course, that the President is only fulfilling a promise. The union bosses were promised a reward for their support in the 1964 campaign. The unions would like to have that reward. But first the President will have to deliver labor's "wanted man."

Rotary Club To Give Award

Dr. John Hamrick, Shelby surgeon, will show slides from a trip he took to Alaska at Thursday's Rotary club meeting at 12:15 at the Country Club.

Thomas L. Trott is program chairman.

Presentation of the civic club's annual award to the Kings Mountain industry leading donors at 1964 visits of the Red Cross bloodmobile will be as highlight of the meeting. The award will go to Foote Mineral Company's Kings Mountain operation.

E. R. Goter will accept the award for the local plant.

President Devere Smith will preside.

Spice CABINET

In the past, moth and carpet beetle control for wool carpets was a problem for the housewife. This is no longer so. Most American carpet mills now permanently mothproof all wool carpetings, eliminating moth and beetle problems. Carpets and rugs of man-made fibers are naturally resistant to moths and beetles.

If your wool carpet is not labeled mothproof, some simple precautions should be taken.

You can discourage moth larvae from feeding on your rugs and carpets by regular vacuuming and by using professional rug cleaning services at least once a year.

HARRIS Funeral Home
KINGS MOUNTAIN, NORTH CAROLINA

Dear friends,

It has been our privilege to serve members of nearly all religions. Some require specific rituals as part of the funeral service. We are well aware of these requirements and meticulously fulfill them.

We are also most willing to comply with personal variations in the conduct of the funeral service.

Respectfully,
J. Wells Harris
