Women's Health

Leeds, England (WMNS): A mild depression after the joyous achievement of giving birth is quite normal about four days after the great event, according to J. S. Scott, Leeds University professor of obstetrics. But Prof. Scott feels that too often the atmosphere surrounding a new mother contributes to a deepening of that depression. He says a new mother is not invalid and suggests that just as soon as it seems reasonably certain that she is in good condition, a new mother "be given a glass of champagne, a cup of tea, or whatever her palate fancies."

Chewing gum has its place—so we're assured by both tots and teens. But its place isn't in the water. Swimmers and tiny waders shouldn't chew gum while in the water. A sudden gasp can lodge the gum so deep in the larynx that those administering first aid can't reach it, even if they know it's there.

McCoy Air Force Base, Fla. (WMNS): Having a drink just before or during a high altitude jet flight could be hazardous, if there was sudden decompression of the plane's cabin. This is the report of Air Force investigators, Capt. J. L. Nettles and Robert N. Olson.

Using volunteers in altitude chamber tests, they found that the consumption of the alcoholic equivalent of one martini. Because those minutes could be vital in obtaining supplementary oxygen or in other emergency procedures, they conclude that "this factor alone should prohibit the use of alcohol prior to, or during flight."

London, England (WMNS): One by one, lethal and disabling diseases yield to medical science, but the common cold carries on. A new clue—albeit a slim one tested on only four persons—is reported in the British medical journal, The Lancet, by four researchers from Bombay, India. They write: "We suggest that man to some extent owes his common cold to the consumption of common salt. A virus has long been incriminated as the causal agent; but it could be just a passenger and not the driver. Two adults and two children with recurrent common cold have obtained complete and sustained relief for the past 6-14 months by taking a salt-free diet. In children a common cold can be induced at will by administering a salted diet."

Today's tip: Every woman over 20 should have an annual checkup that includes a Papanicolaou test. A recent study by a Canadian doctor covering a period of six years shows its value. The test uncovered 15 cases of cervical cancer in 723 patients undergoing examination. Thirteen of the cases were minor and easily treated. Two were pervasive, but even of these, one was satisfactorily treated.
