Blood Vessels In Human Body 60,000 Miles Long

CHAPEL HILL — If the blood vessels in an average-sized adult were laid end to end, how far do you think they would extend? Sixty thousand miles, according to the North Carolina Heart Association. That's more than one hundred times the distance from one end of the Tar Heel State to the other—plenty of area in which things can go wrong! Kinks, plugs and leaks in this marvelous maze of blood-channels can interfere with normal circulation, and every year they cause about half of all deaths in North Carolina. One of the less dangerous, but more annoying, problems to which the blood vessels are heir is that condition known as "varicose veins". They are perhaps the most common of circulatory troubles, and they afflict both men and women. Your heart is the center and dynamo of your circulatory system, sending blood out through the arteries; it is the depot to which the blood returns through the veins. On the return trip from the legs to the heart, the blood has a long uphill climb. It is aided in this journey by three things: Blood pressure, stronger in the arteries, is considerably diminished in the veins but still gives the blood a push. The movement of leg muscles during normal activity or exercise helps massage the blood upward through vein walls. And the third aid is an extremely ingenious anti-gravity device—little, cuplike valves which section off the veins and maintain one-way traffic. They open to let the blood travel upward, then close tightly to keep it from falling back. Varicose veins develop when walls or valves weaken. Some persons may be born with weak venous valves or walls. However, disease, injury, overweight, pregnancy—even tight clothing—can damage or put undue pressure on the veins. When vein walls are weak, eventually they may give way under the pressure of blood, and sag outward at the site of the valves. Therefore, the valves cannot close tightly enough to regulate blood flow properly. This increases the pressure of blood against the vein walls, which may balloon and become "varicose." Doctors recommend that such persons put their feet up often—at home, even at the office—if they can get away with it. And, the Heart Association adds, even if you don't have varicose veins it's a good idea to interrupt long automobile trips to let the whole family stretch legs. For free single copies of a Heart Association booklet on "Varicose Veins," readers may write HEART, Chapel Hill, North Carolina. SESSION TO MEET Members of the Session of First Presbyterian church will gather at 10:40 a.m. Sunday to receive new members, Dr. Paul Ausley, pastor, has announced.
