Newlyweds Should Keep Family-Spending Plan

RALEIGH — Some new brides continue working; others don't. The new bride who plans to hold her job will get the most satisfaction from her income and her husband's when they have a family spending plan, extension home economics specialists at North Carolina State University believe.

To help the marriage partnership get off to a good beginning, some sound financial planning is needed. Husband and wife can begin figuring day-to-day expenses they'll both have, then include such expenses as rent and installment payments.

Another decision the couple needs to make is who will pay the monthly bills. The specialists advise a young couple to look at paychecks as "our income" instead of "mine" or "yours."

The wife may wish to deposit part or all of her check in a savings account and pay monthly bills from her husband's earnings. It's a good idea to set up goals for the use of the wife's income, the specialists point out. The couple may decide to use it to buy furniture or household equipment, for a down payment on a house, or for a special desire.

Unless the couple does some financial planning, there's danger of spending both incomes with no thought to living on one income in the future. If illness or a baby cuts off the second income, it may not be easy to adjust to one income.
