New Book By Callahan Off Presses

A new book, "FLIGHT FROM THE REPUBLIC: The Tories of the American Revolution", by North Callahan, who writes the New York column for this newspaper, has just been published by The Bobbs-Merrill Company. This is the second volume on this subject by Mr. Callahan, the first being "ROYAL RAIDERS" which was published by the same company three years ago and was hailed as an important and exciting work by reviewers.

The Tories, or Loyalists as they are also called, have been neglected in American history and it is this gap which North Callahan, a professor of history at New York University, aims to fill. Authorities on early American history say that he has been successful and that the printed results, as shown in his books, are entertaining to read as well as scholarly. "Once I started reading 'FLIGHT FROM THE REPUBLIC'", said the eminent historian Lawrence Henry Gipson, "I had to continue it."

The new book tells of some 100,000 Americans who remained loyal to the British Crown during the War for Independence and who became exiles in Canada, Great Britain and the West Indies. They lost the war and had to leave, and their exodus makes a moving, sad and suspenseful story of people uprooted from their homes. Some had time only to grab their children and clothes before fleeing from the victorious American patriots. Settling in a strange land under harsh conditions was a thrilling adventure as fascinating as a novel. The book includes a new account of the turn-coat, Benedict Arnold, and how he carried on his tempestuous life in Canada after the war. The maternal ancestor of Charles A. Lindbergh was a Tory with a rousing story that reads like fiction.

North Callahan found his newspaper experience helpful in digging into old records and interviewing descendants from Halifax to Antigua, from Scotland to southern England. As a result, his new volume contains many zesty quotes from hitherto unpublished diaries and documents.

Husband, Wife Should Discuss Family Matters

RALEIGH — Husbands and wives who take the time to discuss what happens to them each day have more satisfactory marriages and less emotional adjustments than do couples who seldom, if ever, bother to share their experiences.

That reminder comes from Leo F. Hawkins, extension family relations specialist, North Carolina State University.

Hawkins notes that "in the past, or in the father-dominated family, the ideal wife was one who coped with her own worries." She believed her husband was too busy to be worried with her small troubles. In this same type family, the husband felt his wife did not have the intellectual capacity or the emotional stability to listen to his troubles. Thus, each person went his own way, receiving little emotional support from the other.

"This situation is changing," Hawkins believes. A research study, involving 909 couples in the Detroit area, indicates that marriage can provide a lifetime of help, as needed, if husbands and wives learn to share their daily experiences with each other.

Legan Finishes Naval School

NEWPORT, R. I. (FHTNC) — Commissaryman Second Class Matron D. Legan, USN, son of Mrs. Mary C. Legan of 21 Elm St., Kings Mountain, N. C., was graduated from the Commissaryman Steward School, Naval Schools Command Newport, R. I.

The 14-week course of instruction was designed to provide advanced training in the preparing and serving of food.

Students at the school were taught how to plan a menu that provides a well-balanced meal.

They were also introduced to the paper-work that is involved in a Navy supply department; how to order provisions and figure costs. Finally, they were taught the safety procedures used in Navy galleys and bake shops.

The same study showed that wives of high status husbands were more apt to share their troubles than were the wives of low status husbands. Couples in a democratic type family shared their troubles more often than did couples in a father-dominated or mother-dominated family.

Surprising to some people, interaction or sharing of troubles not only declines with the coming of children; it is least about the time the children are finishing college. "It appears the sharing of troubles declines as the family cycle goes on," Hawkins said.

Wives who very seldom share their troubles with their husbands said they received no sympathy or help when they did try to talk to them. However, women who discussed their home problems each day, usually got sympathy and advice from their husbands.

The study shows that criticism and rejection are the responses that help the least. "One would expect that," Hawkins observed. Women with husbands much younger than they were received the least sympathy and help, Hawkins added.

In summarizing the Detroit study, Hawkins said, "talking things over with each other daily is an important function of marriage. Even though relatively few couples make the best use of this kind of therapy—that is listening, understanding and really making an attempt to help each other; this function has vast possibilities for good within marriage and the family."

"The study shows not one disappointing marriage among those who made good use of sharing what has happened to them on a daily basis," he concluded.

Newspapers Produce Light And Information. Their Absence Results In Darkness.

Correct information is invaluable to a free people and for keeping a free people free.

Few other nations of the world are as fortunate as the United States, which, through the wisdom of their forefathers, is legatee of a heritage of freedom of speech, of assembly, of religious worship, and of the press.

Maintaining of these freedoms has not always been easy, but they have nevertheless been maintained through the years.

A free press is the cornerstone of the others. Without the dissemination of the news — factual information gathered by trained professional newsmen — the other freedoms would soon be abrogated in practice, if not in the text of the United States Constitution.
