New Industry Will Locate In Shelby

Richardson Homes Corporation, Elkhart, Indiana has announced completion of plans which will bring a half million dollar mobile home factory to Shelby this summer on a 27-acre lot adjacent to the PPG plant five miles northwest of Shelby.
The Shelby Chamber of Commerce Industrial Committee at a Wednesday morning coffee and doughnut session called by Chairman C. Rush Hamrick, Jr. made the announcement.
Since January, the Shelby Chamber of Commerce and the North Carolina Department of Conservation and Development have worked together to bring this announcement to fruition.
Officers of the Shelby Chamber are Jack Palmer, Jr., president; Lloyd C. Bost and Earl W. Spangler, vice-presidents; and Paul P. Limerick, executive vice-president.
Construction of the pre-engineered 54,000 square foot plant will begin in the immediate future with production scheduled for October. Like Richardson's Indiana operation, the new structure will be one of the most modern in the industry and will contain the latest engineering developments in equipment and machinery. It will be capable of producing 3500 homes per year and initially will employ a minimum of 50 persons.
COMMUNITY PRAISED
In a joint statement issued by Robert E. Richardson, President, and Richard M. Wilson, Vice President of Manufacturing, Shelby's overall community spirit was cited as an important factor for the Richardson decision: "Richardson needed a southeastern based manufacturing operation in order to more efficiently serve its growing markets in Virginia, Georgia, North and South Carolina, Northern Florida, and Eastern Tennessee. Because of its location in the center of this mobile home marketing area, Shelby was one of many sites considered. Our final decision was strongly influenced by the attitude of Shelby's community leaders. Their progressive spirit and the high degree of personal and community pride along with an excellent approach to social and civic situations was still another contributing factor."
