VA Questions And Answers

Q—I plan to enter college under the G. I. Bill in September and intend to take one three-semester-hour course. With a wife and three children, I must also work. Will I receive extra training allowance for my dependents?

A—No. A veteran enrolled for less than half time can be paid the cost of the course only but not to exceed $30. Three semester hours are one quarter time for an undergraduate student. Thus you will not receive additional training allowance for your dependents.

Q—I am a World War II veteran receiving VA service-connected disability compensation for blindness of both eyes. I have never received the $1,600 automobile allowance. Is it possible to receive this benefit now?

A—You may now be eligible for this benefit. You should file a claim with the Veterans Administration regional office which maintains your records. The Veterans Pension and Readjustment Assistance Act of 1967, signed into law last Aug. 31, removes the time limit in which eligible veterans can apply for this benefit.

Q—I am thinking of selling my home which I bought with a G. I. loan. The loan has not been paid in full. If the prospective buyer defaults, will I be liable to the Veterans Administration for the unpaid amount of the loan? Is there any way I can be released from this liability?

A—The answer to both of your questions is yes. If you sell your home, which has not been paid for, and the buyer defaults on the G. I. loan, you will be liable to VA for any amount VA must pay the lender under the loan guaranty contract.

However, the VA generally will release you from all further liability to the government if the buyer of your home will assume full liability for the repayment of the loan in a written agreement required by VA. You should write to the VA office that guaranteed your loan before you sign a sales contract and ask for the necessary forms and instructions on how you can be released from personal liability on your loan.
