Don't Open Unwanted Mail

RALEIGH — Most of us can easily recognize packages we're looking for in the Christmas mail. They come from friends and relatives or they are the packages we've ordered for Christmas gifts.

can come our way too. If you wonder what to do with it or about it, extension home economics specialists, North Carolina State University, offer some timely advice. They suggest "checking packages carefully to detect unwanted merchandise before you open the box or envelope."

Legally you have no obligation concerning unordered merchandise. You don't have to pay for or return it. What's more, the company can't make you either take either course of action.

Even though you have no legal obligation, the best thing to do with such packages is to mark "refused" on the cover and return the packages to the Post Office. The company sending them will have to pay return postage and will, as a result, probably take you off their mailing list.

If you do open the package, you have officially accepted the package as far as the Post Office is concerned. Then, if you decide to return the package, you must pay the postage. Under these circumstances, it is best to check the package before you open it.

Postal regulations prohibit only the sending of unordered packages C.O.D. or by insured mail. There are no laws against the mailing of unordered merchandise.

If you receive unordered packages, mailed C.O.D., notify your postmaster so postal inspectors can investigate. And, for good measure, check any questionable mail with the Post Office and the Better Business Bureau. Then return unopened any unordered merchandise.

Most common articles to be mailed this way are greeting cards, books, neckties, pen-pencil sets, auto key rings and religious medals.

Bell Foreman Retires After 43 Years

William Frank Lowe, Building Service Foreman for Southern Bell Telephone Company, Gastonia, has retired after 43 years and 6 months of service with the telephone company.

Lowe began his career in Gastonia in May 1926 with the old Piedmont Telephone Company and has also worked in Lumberton, Goldsboro, Charlotte, and Kings Mountain.
