Insurance Top Subject Of Motorist

RALEIGH — What is the favorite subject when the Tar Heel motoring public has a complaint to take up with the Department of Motor Vehicles?

An arrest for a traffic violation? No?

The safety inspection program? No.

A license suspension or revocation? No.

Driver license examinations? No.

The Financial Responsibility Act? If you guessed this one, you are right.

Few people know it by that name, but it's the act administered by the department that, simply stated, requires a motor vehicle owner to maintain continuous liability insurance or forfeit his or her license plate.

According to Director James H. Stamey of the Registration Division, which carries out the provisions of the act, "Most of the complaints originate simply because the average motorist isn't familiar with the requirement. And that's because the motorist doesn't read his mail."

Stamey explained that full details of the Financial Responsibility Act are mailed to every motor vehicle owner in North Carolina each year along with the annual license plate renewal cards.

"The trouble begins," he said, "when we receive a notice from an insurance company that liability insurance on a particular vehicle has terminated and our records indicate that the license plate has not been turned in. We immediately notify the motorist of the insurance company's action and allow the owner 15 days to surrender the plate or show that coverage has been continuous."

"If there has been even one day's lapse in coverage, the license plate must be surrendered. If this is done within 15 days the only penalty is the cost of purchasing a new plate when the insurance is reinstated."

Stamey explained that vehicle owners who fail to respond within the 15-day period face an automatic 60-day suspension of the re-licensing privilege. It isn't a Registration Division policy or a policy. It's a State law.

Some attempt to circumvent the law by transferring the title to the vehicle to their wife, husband or child and having them apply for new insurance. The law covers that, too. It can't be done.

Stamey also advised that insurance must be carried continuously when a plate is transferred from one vehicle to another or when vehicle classifications are changed.

Finally, the Registration Division director suggests that "If a person, for any reason, wants to stop operating a vehicle and wants to cancel the liability insurance, he should turn in the plate before the coverage is to end. When this is done, a new plate will be issued free of charge at any time during the same year when the insurance is reinstated."

Stamey concluded that his division processed 717,816 insurance termination notices during 1969. Indications are there will be a 10 per cent increase for 1970.

Dependency Status Clarified

Greensboro — Many taxpayers want to know whether they may continue to claim their child as a dependent after the child gets married.

J. E. Wall, District Director for Internal Revenue Service, says that a taxpayer may claim his married child as a dependent if he furnishes more than one-half of the child's support and meets all the other dependency requirements — except in some cases where the child files a joint return with his spouse. If the child files a joint return, the parent is not allowed the dependency deduction, unless the joint return was filed by his child only for the purpose of receiving a refund of taxes and neither the child nor his spouse had sufficient income to be required by regulations to file a return. Only in such cases may a parent claim his child who files a joint return.

Director Wall suggested that parents who are supporting married children might consider conferring with the children to decide the best way to file their returns next year since, in some cases, it may save tax dollars for the married couple to file a joint return even though the joint return may nullify the parent's right to the dependency deduction for his child.

Wall added that a joint return cannot be changed to separate returns after the final date for filing, which, for nearly everybody, is April 15.
