U. S. Jaycees Had Humble Start As Herculeum Club Of St. Louis

Each year a new and important chapter must be added to the history of The United States Jaycees, for although each member is proud of his organization's rich heritage, he is faithfully determined to contribute to its future successes.

The organization that is now The U. S. Jaycees resulted from the expansion of a very fundamental yet valid idea that young men can become actively involved in public service since youth is no handicap for participation in municipal, state and national affairs.

When one considers the scope of the Jaycee movement today, it is difficult to conceive its humble beginning as the Herculeum Dance Club of St. Louis, Missouri, a group led by Jaycee founder Henry Giessenbier, Jr.

The Herculeum, originated by Giessenbier in 1910, had as its purpose the social elevation of its members, a goal it rapidly attained. By 1914 it was the outstanding dancing club of the day in St. Louis and prepared to merge with six other similar groups to form the Federation of Dancing Clubs.

A major objective of the Federation was to encourage the revival of the two-step and waltz, dances which were being overshadowed by the "Turkey Trot" and "Bear Hug."

A second objective was to renew respect for dancing in general. This was accomplished by each member club pledging to refuse to sponsor any unchaperoned dances or functions where liquor was served.

Giessenbier's father was employed as a head waiter at a St. Louis restaurant, the Mission Inn, and the Federation took advantage of the facilities for occasional meetings.

During the summer of 1915, young Henry Giessenbier was particularly impressed with the comments of a local politician who came to address a meeting of the Federation. The orator, Colonel H. N. Morgan, spoke in favor of a Parkway issue, but more importantly, convinced Giessenbier that young men should take a more active interest and role in public affairs.

Following a series of meetings with Morgan and others from which he gained further encouragement, Giessenbier took the first step toward the Jaycee movement of today. On October 13, 1915, in the Mission Inn, 32 young men formed the Young Men's Progressive Civic Association.

During the early years Y.M.P.C.A. gained support from many individuals, but none was more valuable than the President of the St. Louis Chamber of Commerce, Clarence H. Howard.

In his inaugural address Howard had called for a group capable of drawing young men into public affairs. The very next day Giessenbier and Andrew Munggenast contacted Howard and told him of the goals of the Y.M.P.C.A.

As a result of this meeting, Howard became an enthusiastic proponent of the organization and even secured an old art museum to serve as Y.M.P.C.A. headquarters. At about this time the club's name was changed to Junior Citizens.

During World War I the JC's formed Company L of the 138th Infantry Regiment. The commander was Dwight Davis who later became Assistant Secretary of War and donated the Davis Cup tennis trophy.

In 1918 the JC's affiliated with the St. Louis Chamber of Commerce and officially became the Junior Chamber of Commerce.

After returning from service during the war in France, Giessenbier began contacting other cities with young businessmen's groups to inform them of the so-called "St. Louis Plan" of organization.

As a result of Giessenbier's efforts a caucus of twenty-nine clubs from around the nation was held in St. Louis, January 21 and 22, and the national organization was formed. The St. Louis group, which then numbered more than three thousand, became the hub of the national body.

Henry Giessenbier was elected the first president of the organization during a convention which included twenty-seven cities, the following June. Twelve of those cities became charter members of the Junior Chamber.

An official publication of the new national group was begun in 1925 with the first printing of EXPANSION. This publication continued until 1929 and was followed by magazines of various titles until the present FUTURE Magazine was printed in 1938.

During the 1920's, and 30's the Junior Chamber not only grew in size, but the scope of activities became even broader. Then, as now, chapters were concerned with projects which would serve the needs of a community.

In 1935, after years of moving the national office from one city to the next with each new president, it was decided that the Junior Chamber should settle in the city in which it originated. By choosing St. Louis the organization turned down an offer of an annually to the ten most outstanding state vice-presidents, was John McNair of Laurinburg. To date McNair of Laurinburg

'Handicaps' Can Be Conquered Says Golf Champ Arnold Palm

By ARNOLD PALMER Honorary National Chairman The National Foundation - March of Dimes

Wouldn't it be great if medical science could be as successful in wiping out birth defects as it was with polio?

I have joined forces with the March of Dimes in the campaign to do this because I know of the good these people have done and the worthiness of their programs to help children born with defects.

I have seen my father, who was afflicted with polio at a very young age, live a completely normal life without encountering any real setbacks. He is still hard at work, though in his mid-60s, and still plays a pretty good game of golf.

A lot of children born with defects can overcome their handicaps and lead something close to a normal life if given the proper help. That is certainly one goal. But the mental part of being healthy is as important as the physical part, and it was that part that impressed me about Marty Mim Mack, the national poster child for the March of Dimes.

Living With Handicaps Marty and I met when we worked together shooting a film for the 1971 March of Dimes campaign drive. There is quite a bit of difference between my father and Marty. Marty's handicap is far more serious. He was born without arms and with a hip defect that made his left leg three inches shorter than his right.

In my father's case, polio left him with a limp but no other severe physical handicap. He reacted normally, I think, to the fact that he would have to live with his handicap and decided to make every effort, physically and mentally, to overcome it. He has done so and I feel that taking this attitude at the start made it a lot easier for him.

This will be a lot harder for Marty, particularly as he grows older. So far, in the 17 months that I have known him, he seems to be able to overcome his problems pretty much as my father did. This is a good sign for the future.

DETERMINATION is what it takes to overcome handicaps and prevent birth defects, says golf great Arnold Palmer, Honorary National Chairman for the March of Dimes.

Marty seems to have accepted with very little difficulty the fact that he is crippled and will be handicapped for the rest of his life. The first thing for a person with a handicap to do is to recognize that fact and what goes with it and make the very best of it. Marty has done this totally.

Making Those Putts In fact, he seems to recognize and accept his situation much better than people who become handicapped later in life. One thing that is involved is the way people react to someone who is handicapped. Adverse reactions could easily get a youngster like Marty down a bit and perhaps lead him to put up a barrier between himself and others. I don't believe Marty has done this.

When we worked together making the film, I saw in Marty a determination to do all that he was asked to do. He was determined to make those putts. It's something a good golfer must have - determination to play to the very best of his ability. You can't take a half-hearted, disinterested attitude onto a golf course and play up to your ability.

I think that those of us who are trying to help Marty and other children handicapped by birth defects must anticipate that these young people are bound to have some difficulties in adjusting to their predetermined roles in life. Yet, at the same time, I don't think that these people want pity. They want to build up confidence that they can help themselves to some degree, as much as is physically possible.

It is the same with a golfer. You show me a golfer who is a winner and I'll show you a person who feels in his mind that he can make the difficult shots, cope with the pressure of the competition and defeat the course or the opponent.

That's how we have to feel about birth defects. Everybody in America and the world should be concerned with and support the efforts of the March of Dimes and its thousands of volunteer workers. You never know when the diseases and other causes of birth defects might strike home.
