Weekly Health Tip
By WILSON GRIFFIN

The air inside most houses is probably as polluted as the air outside, says a report in Modern Medicine. Outside air gets inside the home. To it is added the smoke and fumes of cooking and heating appliances, chlorine escapes from boiling water, and now we have the added host of chemicals from spray cans — cleaners, deodorants, hair sprays, lacquers, bleaches, pesticides, and air 'fresheners'. The lacquers and waxes can coat the lungs just as they coat other surfaces. It poses the question — do the many convenience sprays improve the quality of living more than they endanger health?
