Present the new fragrant white dogwood, "Fragrant Cloud", Mrs. Johann Sonner of Chapel Hill writes — "recently I discovered on our lot at least one fragrantly blooming dogwood. There is possibly another one. . ."

I wrote Mrs. Sonner, that while "Fragrant Cloud" was discovered growing in the wild as chance seedlings, the popular Golden Delicious apple being a classical example. Here are a few others of a long list: Elberta, Greensboro and Georgia Belle peach varieties; Stayman Wine-sap, Red Delicious, Limbertwig, Kind David and Grimes Golden apple varieties; and Scuppernon, James, Thomas and Mish of the Muscadine grape family.

All of these varieties were discovered between 1820 and 1891, long before controlled breeding of horticultural crops came into the picture.

Getting back to dogwoods, I had a letter from Mrs. Bill Davidson of Elkin requesting the source of supply of "Fragrant Cloud" and also other white and pink varieties. Thinking that you, that might be observed. This would be especially true with the brambles, raspberries, blackberries, dewberries; blueberries; apples; grapes; and some of the ornamentals.

The forests of eastern Carolina are full of seedling Muscadine grapes, blackberries and blueberries. The same is true in western Carolina for raspberries, blackberries, blueberries and bunch grapes. Many years ago we discovered a wide selection of seedling species of blueberries in the Grandfather Mountain and Jones Ridge areas which we found useful in our blueberry breeding program.
