The U. S. Department of Labor which administers the Equal Pay Act, has been actively involved in the question of sex wage discrimination. According to the Department's Wage-Hour Division, over $33.5 million had been found owing to nearly 84,000 employees, almost all of them women, as of the end of June 1971.

The typical urban plantworker received a much better fringe benefit package in 1971 than in 1960, a Labor Department area wage survey has reported. He was provided more holiday time, longer paid vacations, and improved health and insurance benefits, although the proportion of workers receiving these benefits did not increase significantly.
