"Golf is a big business," he said. "How big a business

it's going to become depends on how well organized we can become to handle the tremendous growth and the tremendous amount of interest.

"We have satellite tournaments, major tournaments and so many tournaments on the tour," he added. "The one thing I don't want to see happen is to prostitute our business, just for the sake of trying to take care of a lot of young kids who want to make a living at the game but can't because they don't belong in it.

'It's sort of an infactuation carried away to the point where you'll have a lot of kids out there making touring bums of themselves," he added. "Let's face it, this is an exacting game of science. It's not a game of emotion.

"Golf," he said, "is an intelligent game played by in-gent people stupidly. And I say that without reservator lead American Legion to telligent people stupidly. And I say that without reservation.
