

THE TAR HEEL SPOTLIGHT

This week - April 8 - 14 is National Library Week by proclamation of Pres. Richard Nixon in his statement launching the observance, the President states, "The strength of our nation resides in the knowledge, wisdom and spirit of our people. As we approach the 200th anniversary of our national independence it is imperative that we intensify our efforts to hasten the day when every American will have a truly equal opportunity to realize the full potential of his abilities."

National Library Week gives appropriate focus to the great array of resources offered by our libraries to people of every age.

I ask all Americans during this special observance to share generously in the support of our libraries and to make the fullest possible use of the rich treasures they possess."

And one community in North Carolina has shared from the heart, trying in one small area "to hasten the day when every American will have a truly equal opportunity to realize the full potential of his abilities."

In Sampson County last week, the Lonnie F. Dail Library was dedicated, after months of effort. Some 32 local organizations plus private individuals had pitched in with money, time and talent, carving out a library of some 900 volumes from literally nothing. The Lonnie F. Dail Library is inside the fence of the Sampson County Subsidary Unit of the Department of Correction. Named for and dedicated to the captain of the unit, this small beginning is all the reading material the 100 or so inmates of this correctional unit have access to. Among the volumes are mystery, western and science fiction, biography, black literature and reference material.

In addition to leisure reading, the inmate librarian reports many inmates working toward high school equivalency examinations, as well as other basic education, in connection with the regular classes offered by Sampson County Technical Institute.

Armed with only consultant services from Charles Fox of the North Carolina Library, the various community groups went ahead. Spearheading the effort to furnish library facilities to these men was Mrs. James West, Sampson County Tech teacher who holds regular classes in the unit at the high school level.

Present for the April 1 dedication ceremonies at the unit were David Jones, Secretary of Social Rehabilitation and Control, representatives from the State Library and Department of Corrections, and more than 75 local citizens who had made the impossible dream possible for the 100 men - most of whom realize this is a "great step in rehabilitation."

"By far, the greatest step I've seen," according to the inmate librarian, "The atmosphere of the unit has changed - we don't see so much evidence of tension. The overall interest is great. And it means a great deal to the inmates to know that people care." This is one of the types of sharing envisioned by the President's proclamation and National Library Week.

Washington Report

By CONGRESSMAN JAMES T. LLOYD

VOCATIONAL REHABILITATION

Last week, I introduced legislation in the House of Representatives to provide a continuation of the vocational rehabilitation program. More than 80 members of the House of Representatives joined me in this effort to revitalize this worthwhile program which over the years has assisted more than three million handicapped people in returning to productive lives.

The legislative situation which necessitates a vocational rehabilitation bill at this time is rather complex. Last year, both the Senate and the House of Representatives passed legislation to extend the vocational rehabilitation program for two years. The bill included every major structural change and provided for additional services under the program. However, the President pocket vetoed the bill declaring that it "would authorize funding far in excess of the budget request and far beyond what can be made available and used effectively."

Last month both houses of Congress again passed vocational rehabilitation legislation. On March 27, President Nixon exercised his veto power for the first time this year and vetoed the measure again for funding reasons. Last week, the Senate sustained the veto, which means that new legislation is needed. At present, funds will expire for this program on June 30, 1973.

Both the President and the Congress have a strong commitment to an effective rehabilitation program. The President, in vetoing the bill, expressed serious concern over the inclusion of new and expanded spending authority for a program that had already doubled in size in the past four years. The legislation which I have introduced attempts to correct some of the objections the President expressed in vetoing the bill. The bill would maintain a strong and healthy vocational rehabilitation program within responsible spending levels.

Throughout my ten years in Congress, I have been a strong advocate of the vocational rehabilitation program. One of the oldest Federal grant-in-aid programs, it has been in operation for 53 years. This year, the vocational rehabilitation program will serve 1.2 million people and will rehabilitate 340,000 to meaningful and productive lives. One of the major accomplishments of this program has been the permanent removal of many Americans from the public assistance rolls. It is clear that the program contributes financial as well as social benefits in terms of helping those formerly dependent on the government to becoming contributing and tax-paying members of society.

I have urged that the House Education and Labor Committee schedule hearings at the earliest opportunity on the legislation I have introduced to extend and revise the vocational rehabilitation program so that it can continue to provide needed services to needy Americans.

VETERAN'S PENSIONS

Recent Social Security increases have had the unfortunate effect of reducing the real income of many of our nation's older wartime veterans who qualify for both Social Security retirement and veterans' pension. In all too many cases, Social Security increases have either returned the veteran's total retirement income or made him ineligible for further veterans' assistance. Consequently, I have introduced legislation in the House of Representatives to adjust the maximum income ceiling to be more consistent with recent increases in Social Security benefits.

Similar legislation was passed by the Senate last year. It is my understanding that early hearings on pensions legislation will be scheduled by the House Veterans Affairs committee. I am hopeful that with early action we can correct this inequity and live up to our obligations to our nation's veterans.

Unionization is generally lower in areas with less than 1,000 population than in metropolitan areas where earnings of union members are higher than those of nonunion workers in all except white collar occupations.

CEREALS NO. 1

Most of the world's population relies on high carbohydrate foods such as cereals, sugar, roots, tubers and plantains, for a major share of its diet. Cereals are the most important, directly accounting for almost two-thirds of the average per capita calorie intake in the Far East and nearly half in the Soviet Union and Eastern Europe. Rice and wheat are consumed in the largest quantities.
