Julie Nixon Eisenhower To Address Mint Museum Antiques Show Patrons

Julie Nixon Eisenhower has accepted the invitation to be the honorary chairman for the Mint Museum Antiques show at the Charlotte Merchandise Mart, October 13-14.

Sponsored by the Womens Auxiliary of the Mint Museum, the antiques show is an annual fund-raising event with proceeds going for educational materials and new acquisition for the museum's collections and exhibits.

The president's youngest daughter will address the patrons of the mint the evening of Oct. 12 at a formal party which will preview the four-day show. She is expected to be accompanied by her husband, David, a part-time columnist for the Philadelphia Bulletin.

As honorary chairman, Julie is ton's public buildings began last year. Her mother, Julie wrote to the auxiliary, has been acquiring historic antiques for the White House for some time and is now displaying more objects from their private quarters which were owned or used by former presidents.

One of these popular items now on display in the White House is the exquisite dinner and dessert service of French sterling silver, purchased in 1733 by Andrew Jackson. It includes two coffee pots, a cream jug, soup tureens, sauce boats, several plates in different sizes, salt castors and pieces of flatware. The majority of the pieces were made by French silversmith Martin Guillaume Niennais and date from 1783-1819.

Other pieces, Julie said, include a gilt and mahogany framed mirror owned by George Washington, Ulysses S. Grant's tortoise shell waste basket lined with red satin and one of eight known copies of the sheet music of the first printing of the Star Spangled Banner.

The White House is many things, a home, an office, a monument," Julie said. "But it has also become one of the finest museums in the country... a living symbol of grace and elegance in period furniture."

Thirty dealers from 13 states will be selling antique furniture, silver, porcelain, rugs, ceramics and specialty items during the show. A special service this year will allow a buyer to take an item "on approval" for a short time. (Continued On Page Two)
