

After long wait, snowfall finally came Monday....

Photos

by a slipping

and sliding

Gary

Stewart...

STANDING ON THE CORNER — Kings Mountain school students no sooner arrived at school Monday until they told school had been dismissed because of the snow. This young student stands at the corner at West

School waiting for his mother to come back and pick him up. He's dressed for the weather and no doubt was dreaming about the fun he was going to have once he got home.

BUILDING FROSTY — Jeff Mauney, Ricky Greene and Randy Mauney, left to right, put the finishing touches on a snowman Monday morning at the corner of Landing Street and Bridges Drive.

They didn't have time to find the entire costume they had originally planned on, but they managed to make him look nice with rocks for eyes and an old silk hat.

HERE GOES — A young man stopped briefly on Landing Street Monday morning to watch a photographer snapping pictures on some youngsters building a snowman but he quickly found it doesn't pay to stand around too long when it's play time in the snow. He got a double-barrel load of snowballs.

FUN IN THE SNOW — Snow sleds in Kings Mountain have been in storage for some time so when an accumulation finally came Monday youngsters brought them out. Just about everybody in the community took advantage of this steep hill on Sims Street. The two riders found the sledding good but they didn't make many trips down the hill without getting snowballed by their friends.

WORKING ON STREETS — Kings Mountain city workers were busy Monday morning putting sand on the streets to make them a bit safer for motorists. The city crew is shown here on Mountain Street near the intersection of Battleground Avenue.