

At N.C. State University

Stoll Presented Scholarship

Kenneth Stoll, rising junior at N.C. State University and son of Mr. and Mrs. J.M. Stoll, Jr. of 1015 Sherwood Lane, was presented the Gerber Horticulture Scholarship Award at the annual N.C. State University Horticulture Club banquet Apr. 24th at the University's Faculty Club. Presenting the $500 scholarship award was Dr. E.E. Bilderback, chairman of N.C. State's Agricultural and Life Sciences' scholarship committee.

The scholarship is given annually by the Gerber Co. in an effort to stimulate and promote study in the areas of fruit and vegetable production.

To be eligible for the scholarship, the student must be a rising N.C. State senior majoring in the fruits and vegetables option of State's Horticulture program and must have a minimum cumulative grade point average of 3.0 out of a possible 4.0. Also, the student chosen must have demonstrated a true interest and leadership ability in the area of horticulture.

Stoll was selected on the basis of his scholastic achievement and leadership ability. "Ken has proven that he has a very sincere interest in bettering North Carolina's fruit and vegetable industry and had the highest grade point average of any rising senior in the field of candidates." We need more like him", Dr. Bilderback commented when presenting the award.

Stoll has worked summers from Mountain View Farms since he was a KMSHS junior student and has been encouraged in his chosen field by Cameron Ware, fruit grower.

Ken's father is purchasing agent for Gaston County. His mother, a former Kings Mountain Public School teacher, is now director of the Learning Lab at Gaston Skills, Dallas. The Stolls

When your dog rolls over his back and wags his tail, he may be communicating more than a desire to be stroked. Some animal behaviorists say the dog is offering you an expression of extreme trust and love by exposing his vital and vulnerable parts.
