Jeff Lane
Second In Competition

Four eighth grade Science students won honors in the recent national "Aluminum Creative Energy Conservation Awards" and one of the group, Jeff Lane, finished in second place in the national contest.

The other winners were Kelly Kuykendall and Todd Weaver, both of whom won third place prizes, and Jacqueline Hartgrove, who received honorable mention.

According to Michael Fidanzato, special services director, the local entries "were reviewed by science writers, editors and engineers who were genuinely impressed." Jeffrey Lane received a Wilson aluminum tennis racquet, the third place winners received aluminum belt buckles and the honorable mention recipient received an aluminum key ring.

The contest is sponsored by Scholastic Magazines.

Local students are members of the Earth Science class instructed by Greg Payseur and David Heffner at Kings Mountain Junior High.

"All progress is based upon a universal desire on the part of every organism to live beyond its income."
