for the City of Shelby, contacted by phone following the Kings Mountain meeting, disagreed with Little.

"That's absolutely not true," he said. "We're not selling electricity cheaper than we're buying it. We went up at the end of the year the same amount as Duke increased."

Gidney said there was a lot of confusion over the television report last week, and confirmed that Channel 9 used old rates to compile a yearly average for Shelby and Lincolnton. (Channel 9 clarified its earlier report on Monday night's late news).

Gidney said Shelby's retail rate of $54.18 is much lower than Kings Mountain's rate of $61.82 because Shelby gives all customers a water heating rate whether they qualify for it or not.

"There has been some confusion in exactly what numbers were used" on the TV report, he said. "Duke has a R rate with a footnote for water heating. If a customer meets certain water heating criteria, he qualifies for a reduced rate. We use it (reduced rate) whether they meet the criteria or not."

If Shelby used Duke's residential rates, its rates would be $59.83, the same as Duke's and Lincolnton's, and $1.99 lower than Kings Mountain's.

But, in the long run, Little said, Kings Mountain's rates could be lower than the others because the other three companies are presently charging the lower winter rates. All will balance out when the higher summer rates take effect.

"In other words," Childers said, "we're looking like the bad guy but when it's all over we're going to look good?"

Little said when a final decision is reached on Duke's proposal, and if Duke is not given the entire 15 percent hike, the city board can decide to cut its rate or make refunds to its customers.

"But, right now, I think you've done the right thing" by the December increase," he said.

"Then, you're telling us to stay where we are?," King asked.

"If you can do without $105,000, I recommend that you drop the rates," Little said. "But the figures we recommended will barely meet your budget."

"I don't see how the city can afford to lose $108,000," King said. "And I don't figure we'll ever recoup that much money," Childers added.

Mayor John Moss called three times for a second to Commissioner Nicholson's motion to cut the rates, and then declared the motion dead because of a lack of a second.
