Pioneers Sponsor Zoo Days

Children that visit the North Carolina Zoo in Asheboro will get to see lions, chimpanzees, elephants, baboons and a lot of other popular animals plus an exotic wild life animal called the sitatunga.

Two of these rare antelope type creatures are at their new home in the North Carolina Zoo, courtesy of the Telephone Pioneers.

The sitatunga is a rather shy creature that stands 40 inches tall and weighs 200 pounds, and is also known as the marsh buck. It often submerges in water entirely, with only the tip of its snout protruding above the surface.

Pioneers are longer - service telephone employees, both active and retired, who have served at least 18 years with the telephone industry.

The Pioneers have decided to continue to assist the North Carolina Zoo as a community service project that will benefit every person in the state.

Frances Brown publicity chairperson for the Foothills Council said that this is a North Carolina Chapter No. 35 project which each council in involved and excited about.

Since this is an on going project for the Telephone Pioneers, the zoo will hold special zoo days each year. On that day the Pioneers will treat local retarded youngsters to a day at the zoo.

Sam Davis, manager-public relations for Southern Bell, is president of the 542 Member Foothills Council.
