Attend N.C. Close-Up

On May 19-21 approximately 350 students and teachers gathered in Raleigh at Peace College for the first session of North Carolina Close Up. Kings Mountain Senior High School representatives who were among the participants included Susan Biggers, Jerry McDaniel, Thomas Putnam, Si Silaphet and their teacher-coordinator Dean Westmoreland.

North Carolina Close Up began in 1978. It is an educational program which is designed to allow students and their teachers to interact with state officials, legislators, representatives of news media, lobbyist organizations and large private businesses through on-site visitation, panel discussions, seminars, questions and answer sessions etc. The program is modeled after the highly successful National Close Up Program which provides opportunities for teachers and students to use Washington, D.C. as a classroom in the same manner that Raleigh is used for the North Carolina program.

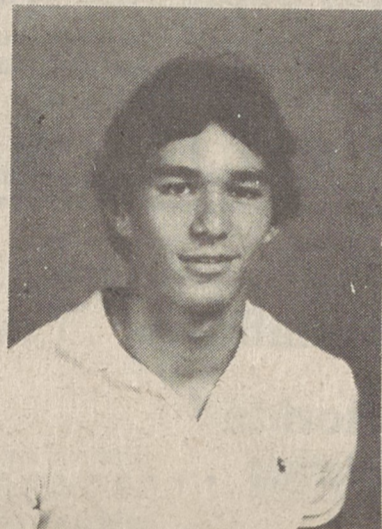

North Carolina Close Up is now in its sixth year of operation. It is governed by a working advisory committee of teachers and administrators from North Carolina school systems, the Social Studies Division of the State Department of Public Instruction and by other governmental agencies.

Governor James B. Hunt keynoted the opening session. Other elected officials who participated were Senator Harold W. Hardison, Senator Henson Barnes, Rep. Harold J. Brubaker, State Superintendent of Public Instruction A. Craig Phillips, State Auditor Edward Renfrow, Commissioner of Insurance John Ingram, Commissioner of Labor John C. Brooks, State Treasurer Harlan Boyles and Judge Charles L. Becton of the North Carolina Court of Appeals. In addition to studies on governmental operations other subjects explored were "Separation of Church and State", "The Lottery", "The Safe Roads Act (DUI)", "International economics", and "Federal Governmental Regulations of Business".

Approximately 120 high schools including the North Carolina Schools for the Deaf participated in the program.
