Cleveland County Students Attend N. C. Zoo

ASHEBORO - Children from Cleveland County, 91 in all, toured the North Carolina Zoological Park during the 1982-83 school year.

Across the state, 62,413 school children visited the zoo this school year, an increase of 5,152 over the year before.

School faculty increasing are taking their students to Asheboro for the zoo's education program. Zoo staff and volunteers conduct wildlife and conservation programs for school groups from September through June and are expanding these programs.

Zoo officials reported people were confusing the program with the Education Center, a group of paddocks outside the zoo's main area. The Education Center will be closed in September for lack of funds.

Zoo director Robert L. Fry said that "all the reports of closing the Education Center have nothing to do with closing the education program."

"The Education Center is nothing more than an old, somewhat run-down, outdated physical location that we're going to close because it's not economically possible to keep it open," Fry said.

The zoo's education program includes grade-specific tours of the tropical bird and plant exhibit, the R.J. Reynolds Forest Aviary. School groups arriving early for scheduled tours also attend short presentations on adaptive features of various feathers and eggs found in the zoo.

Zoo staff emphasize the value of preparing classes for visits to the zoo. Teachers who wish to participate in the education programs should register their classes with the zoo by telephone.
