Stewart Campaigns In Area

Stewart said he favors a revision of the state tax structure, a limit on the length of legislative sessions and a pay increase for all teachers as a higher priority than merit pay for some. He also proposes to break up a 'small clique' of Senate leaders and to appoint talented young Senators to leadership positions, if elected as the presiding officer of the North Carolina Senate with influence over the course of legislation through the power to appoint committees and to decide which committee will handle each bill.

He also called his opponent Bob Jordan's refusal to debate the issues a 'cowardly approach to campaigning'. Most recently, each candidate has used television to address the other's stands on issues, the utility rates in particular. Stewart has said Jordan's voting record shows he is in favor of letting utilities charge customers for construction work in progress on nuclear power plants. Jordan has countered that by paying for construction work in progress, customers are getting out cheaper in the long run.

Stewart says he expects to see voters from now until election day Tuesday. He acknowledged that pollsters see the race between him and Jordan as close.

In the last days of the campaign, both candidates have bought newspaper space and more television advertising to make their positions on key issues clear.

In asking for a debate, Stewart said he wanted to focus on the key issues in the state. He sees one of those issues as making the lieutenant governor earn his pay. Stewart said the lieutenant governor should be given more duties or the job should revert to the part time status it held before 1973. Both Stewart and Jordan have said they would serve as full time lieutenant governors. The next lieutenant governor needs to present legislature, according to Stewart, that would define those duties and make the man in that position earn his pay. Stewart said that the lieutenant governor should act as the public's spokesman before the various state regulatory agencies as an ombudsman and also be involved more in recruiting industry in North Carolina.
