

Army Recruiters Offer Enlistment Bonuses

Charlotte, N.C.-Army recruiters have been authorized to offer advance promotions, worth $95.00 extra per month, and enlistment bonuses of up to $8,000 for certain skills.

"Both of these programs," said Lt. Col. James J. Mills, commander of the Army's Charlotte Recruiting Battalion, "will be available to qualified high school diploma graduates who score in the top half of the Armed Forces Qualification Test."

Mills is responsible for Regular Army and Army Reserve recruiting in western North Carolina and four counties in South Carolina.

"Advance promotion to the pay grade of Private E-2 is available to young men and women who sign an Army contract up through September 30th," said Mills. "These new soldiers also have the option of going directly into the Regular Army or into the Delayed Entry Program, which allows them up to 365 days after enlistment to report for active duty."

"Military occupational specialties in the $8,000 enlistment bonus package are in the electronic warfare and cryptological operations fields," noted Mills, "while an even dozen military specialties have been made available to receive bonuses of $5,000 to $8,000. A four year enlistment in the Regular Army, and in a bonus field, is required."

"Our recruiters can also offer a $4,000 bonus for a three year plus training enlistment into selected COHORT units," indicated Mills. "A COHORT unit is one where a group of recruits train together and are then deployed either overseas or in the United States as a unit."

"The introduction of the advanced promotion program and expansion of the enlistment bonus packages is in addition to some existing programs," said Mills. "The Army can also offer qualified young men and women the Army College Fund, where the soldier can accumulate up to $20,100 for his or her education and a two year option which would be worth up to $15,200 of College Fund money. There's also training in a particular skill and, in many cases, a guaranteed station or unit of choice before enlistment. More specific information can be obtained by calling any of our recruiting stations in your local area."
