Name's The Same

Somehow last week in a hurry to leave the office to catch a plane for Washington, D.C., this reporter goofed on one of the names in the feature story about Grace Carpenter Wolfe's retirement from City Hall, where she has served as Assistant City Clerk for many years. Included in the names of the office employees at City Hall was the name of Dora Ann Kircus. I was surprised too. Dora Ann Bowen is the "Dora Ann" who works at City Hall. There is a Dora Ann Kircus Heavner of Kings Mountain but that "Dora Ann" doesn't work for the city.

Employ Older Week Underway

"We know that middle-aged and older workers bring both ability and experience into the labor force and this contribute to increased productivity for our state and nation," says Randy Allen, manager of the Shelby office of the North Carolina Employment Security Commission. Mr. Allen added, "Unfortunately age stereotypes exist and it often requires a special effort such as Employ the Older Worker Week to focus public attention on the real contributions that can be made by older workers."

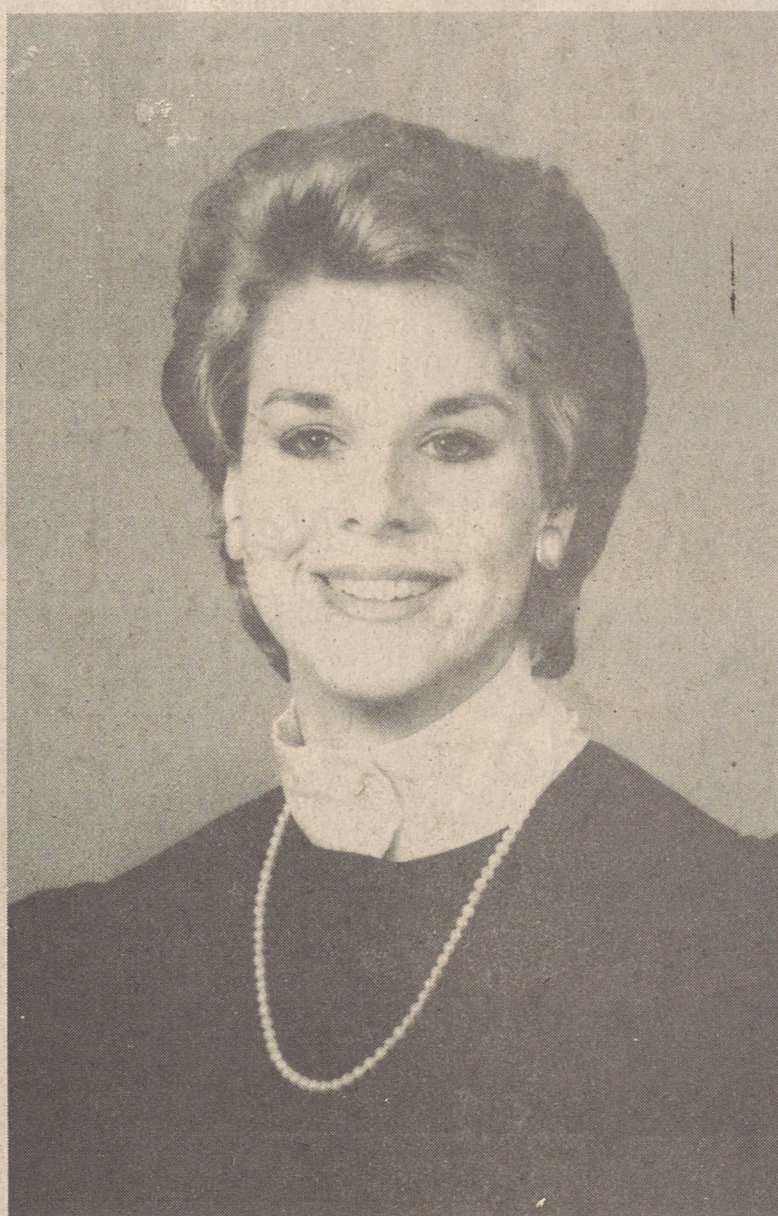

This year the Employment Security Commission and the Department of Human Resources, Division of Aging, are joining forces to promote employment for older workers.

Governor James G. Martin, proclaimed the observance, March 10-16, as an annual means of encouraging employers to add invaluable experience and know-how to their work forces through the employment of older workers.

According to Vicki Banks, local office older worker specialist, more than 2 million North Carolinians are aged 45 and older. As people live longer, the career-minded, job conscious, mature worker is no longer atypical. Among the many positive attributes of older workers are high performance ratings, positive work attitude, job stability, and low absenteeism. Employers can turn these attributes into dollar-savings by hiring the older worker."

Mr. Allen concluded, "Utilizing older worker's skills, skills that only experience brings, makes a lot of sense. As the fastest growing segment of our population, older adults will be needed to supplement the work force of the future. We urge employers to consider older workers when they are hiring."

You do not have to be able to paint to participate in the workshop, according to A.B. Snow of the Southern Arts Society, who is sponsoring her appearance in Kings Mountain. Mrs. Snow said that one of the highlights of Mary's career was when two ladies from the Dixon Community came in and did their first artwork in one of her local classes.

Mrs. Goslen will bring an exhibit of her artwork to be displayed Saturday and Sunday at City Hall. There will be no charge for viewing the exhibit which will be open on Sunday at 1 p.m. Refreshments will be served.

At 2 p.m. Sunday Mrs. Goslen will give a lecture about her art work and discuss certain pieces of her work. She works in many types of media and styles.

For Saturday's program, bring a sack lunch or participants may order lunch from a local drug store. Students will create their own wood cut print. Supplies will be available for a $5 fee. Students will complete the workshop about 3 or 4 p.m.

Saturday.

If citizens care to stay and take part in more print making, they may be able to work until about 4 p.m. Sunday to finish up projects. Southern Arts Society is sponsoring the program on Saturday and Sunday which is partially funded by Grass Roots Grants of North Carolina.

Jim Corlett, poet and writer, said of Mrs. Goslen, "if mountains spoke, or if trees could sing, just the words evoke a picture. So it is that Mary Goslen's images fulfill the symbolists dreams of pictures and colors that seem symphonic. For in her art, the viewers find cascades of music, heard only by inner ears, and felt only by an inner self. Mary Goslen hales from the Appalachia where folk speak plain; Her innte inner birth is clear as well-sound and light madd made manifest and serene."

Mrs. Goslen has displayed in a number of juried shows, traveling exhibitions, public corporate and private collections all over the Eastern Seaboard. She has won numerous awards for paintings and gap graphics including first place in the 11th semi-annual Watercolor Society of North Carolina competition.
