Jack Hunt, speaker pro tem of the North Carolina House of Representatives, joined more than 40 other state legislative leaders from around the country in a four-day program at Boston University that focused on applying advanced management techniques to state government. The fourth annual Leaders Advanced Management Program (LAMP), which took place recently in Boston, examined the changing role of the state legislative leader. The program allowed legislators, many of them recently elected to such positions as senate president, house speaker or majority leader, to examine complex management problems they will encounter as they assume leadership roles in state government. The faculty of Boston University's Public Management Program led sessions which discussed such topics as leadership styles, time management and government/business relations.

"Everyone benefits when state government is well managed," says Hunt. "I found the Leaders Advanced Management Program to be an excellent way to focus on some of the difficult management issues facing state legislative leaders." The program is co-sponsored by Boston University and the State Legislative Leaders Foundation, a non-profit organization dedicated to strengthening state government. Contributions from major corporations and foundations underwrite most of the costs of the program. Boston University, which also offers advanced management programs to major American corporations, waived the $2,500 tuition fee for the legislators.

Quilts Will Be Documented

The Foothills Quilters Guild will sponsor a quilt documentation day for the public on Saturday, June 28th in the auditorium of the County Office Building. Doors will open at 10 a.m. Quilts will be taken in until 2 p.m. This is part of the North Carolina Quilt Project sponsored by the North Carolina Museum of History and the North Carolina Quilt Symposium in an effort to document quiltmakers and quilts presented in North Carolina that were made before 1976.

The documentation process will include: measuring, pattern identification, recording fabric types, dyes, and information about the quilt maker. A photograph will also be taken of each quilt. Bring with you the name of the quilter, date and place of birth, date and location quilt was made, etc. This information and photo of the quilt will be filed in the Museum of History in Raleigh.

There is no charge.

For more information call: Nancy H. Abasiokong 487-5302 or Grace T. Withrow 484-8582.

WE GO LOOKING FOR TROUBLE.

We're in the business of selling insurance. But if selling insurance were all we did we wouldn't be doing you much of a service.

So when you contact us about a policy for your home, office, or plant, we come looking for trouble. We look for the possibilities of fire or accident or theft or any other contingencies that could cause your rates to be high. And when we find problems, we recommend that you correct them. If you do, you'll not only save yourself potential trouble, you'll qualify for a much better insurance rate. Of course we don't make as much money that way, but at Watson our philosophy is to seek out long range business relationships.
