NCAE President Lists Goals

A state standards board for teachers with teacher-members, a teacher preparation task force, and higher salaries for all public school employees are three goals of the North Carolina Association of Educators, says the new president, 39-year-old Karen Garr of Raleigh.

For the next 12 months Ms. Garr says North Carolina is her classroom, not the fourth-fifth grade classroom at Apex Elementary School where she has taught the past 16 years. She will be taking the message of 45,000 teachers plus that of all school personnel in 15 district meetings all over the state and in many school systems.

featured such topics as retirement, fringe benefits, and political action.

"I chose to teach to perpetuate our democracy," said Ms. Garr. "The children are our future." Ms. Garr, who said she never expected to be a teacher, planned on being a doctor but her mother's influence changed her career, as she sat in her mother's classroom in rural Georgia.

"I believe the climate is right in North Carolina for a state standards board in which teachers can help set their own professional standards and will be interested to hear the results of the planning board report, funded by the Carnegie Institute, which former Governor Jim Hunt is chairing, a blueprint for states." She said a standards board would determine qualifications a teacher must have to be licensed to teach and a national certification would be a voluntary basis. She says student teachers should spend a longer internship before they are licensed to teach and she endorses the concept of a national standards board, which would give teachers the advantage of moving from state to state but would also mean that the same school curriculum would be taught nationwide. North Carolina is not among 16 states with state standards board. Ms. Garr believes teachers should serve on the board along with lay people.

"Kids deserve the best teachers and this board would determine whether or not we are giving them the best," said Ms. Garr. "Let teachers set their own standards and they'll be higher", she says.

A large number of Kings Mountain teachers and principals attended the meeting.
