

39,425 Acres Accepted By Cropland Program

The U.S. Department of Agriculture has accepted 39,425 more acres of highly erodible North Carolina cropland into the Conservation Reserve Program. In this latest signup, 1,380 farmers submitted acceptable bids.

Land entered into the Conservation Reserve, as directed by the Food Security Act of 1985, will be ineligible for farming for ten years and must be planted with a permanent vegetative cover. Only cropland classified as highly erodible can be submitted for participation in the program.

The average acceptable bid in North Carolina was $45.73 per acre. The total cost will be more than $1.8 million. In addition, this year's signup included an option in which farmers would receive a "bonus" for each acre of corn base they designated to go under the program. The bonus, to be paid in generic commodity certificates, amounts to $2 a bushel, based on the Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation Service program payment yield for corn. North Carolina farmers will receive more than $1.3 million from the bonus.

Nationally, more than 10 million acres were added to the program and the corn million acres. The USDA has announced base was reduced by almost 2 the next signup period will be July 20 through July 31.
