Drive Safely In Winter

We are a nation on the move. For most of us, "neither snow, nor rain, nor dark of night" can keep us off the highways—in any season, in any weather.

Each year, thousands of deaths and injuries on our nation's highways can be attributed to severe winter weather. Your best bet is to stay home. However, business or holiday plans often make winter traveling necessary. If you must venture out, the following tips may make your journey safer.

Before the cold weather hits, be sure your car is in good running order and is properly serviced. Have a reliable mechanic check your batter, antifreeze, wipers and windshield washer, ignition, and thermostat. Good tires are very important. Not only will you be safer, but in many jurisdictions, there are heavy fines if you are stranded on a snow emergency route without snow tires, chains, or all-weather radials. Plan long trips carefully.

Listen to weather reports and travel's advisors and keep an alternate route in mind. Let someone know where you are going and what time you plan to arrive. Travel in daylight, use major highways, if possible, and try not to travel alone.

Before you start out, clean snow and ice off all parts of your car — windows, hood, roof, trunk, and lights. Snow left on the car could affect visibility once you start driving.

Keep your gas tank as full as possible, especially if you're unfamiliar with the roads or passing through rural areas. A full tank also prevents gas line freeze up.

Even if you restrict your winter driving to short, local trips, certain supplies can help in an emergency. Always keep basic items like a windshield scraper, battery booster cables, a two chain or rope, a bag of sand, a blanket, and a flashlight in your car.

For longer trips, you may want to add a transistor radio (with extra batteries), a first aid kit, road maps, some nonperishable foods, matches and candles, and two or more large coffee cans for sanitary purposes and to burn candles for heat.

Don't overdress when driving. Even on short trips, your clothing should be loose-fitting and comfortable. After the car has warmed up, take off heavy outer clothing, but pull over to the side of the road to do it. Don't try to struggle out of your coat while driving.

If you should get caught on the road during a winter storm, keep calm. Give some indication that you're in trouble — turn on your flashing lights, raise the hood, or tie a cloth from an antenna or door handle.

Whatever you do, stay in the car! Don't leave the car to find shelter or a telephone unless you can actually see one close by (really close — yards away). Disorientation comes very quickly in a blowing snowstorm.

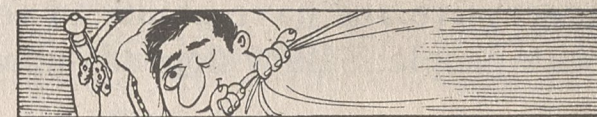

For heat, turn on the car engine for brief periods. To avoid deadly carbon monoxide poisoning, always leave a downwind window open slightly and make sure the exhaust pipe is clear of snow while the engine is running.

If you are caught unprepared, there are many items in the car you can use. Papers and maps can be crinkled up and stuffed in your clothing for added warmth. Rugs and removable seat covers can be used for added insulation. Huddle with your passengers and try using your coats as blankets. They may be more effective that way.

Exercise from time to time by clapping your hands and moving your arms and legs. Don't stay in one position too long, but don't overexert yourself by shoveling or trying to push the car.

Leave the dome light on at night as a signal to rescuers. If there is more than one person in the car, sleep in shifts.

Winter presents many challenges for the snowbelt traveler. By staying calm and using all that's available to stay as warm as possible, your situation will remain one of inconvenience rather than a life or death peril.

Hanging coral on the bed post, people once believed, would prevent nightmares.

People once believed cowslip wine cured insomnia.
