HEALTH VIEWS

RAGAN HARPER

First-aid for nosebleeds

In most cases, nosebleeds are triggered by some trauma to the nose, such as a bump or blow from the outside or a wayward finger inside. Blowing noses due to allergies can also cause nosebleeds.

What to do? First, apply direct and constant pressure by gently squeezing your nose for at least five minutes. If bleeding persists, moisten a tissue with over-the-counter medicated nasal spray or drops that contain phenylephrine to help shrink the blood vessels. Pack the tissue into the nostril, and again apply steady pressure.

Remember; we're here for all your health needs.
