CROP Walk for hungry is Sunday

Get out your walking shoes and walk Sunday for benefit of the hungry.

CROP Walk, the annual 6.2 mile walk, cranks up at 2 p.m. at Central United Methodist Church.

Promoters say you don't have to plan to walk the full route but walkers are invited from the whole community. Church members and civic leaders are working to get pledges and walkers this week to help the Christian Rural Overseas Project.

Twenty-five percent of the money raises stays in Kings Mountain to help support the Kings Mountain Crisis Ministry.

Publicity chairman Geep Howard urge businesses and clubs to sponsor walkers or give grants or pledges themselves.

"This is a most worthy project. Kings Mountain citizens have always been generous in giving to help the less fortunate and we anticipate many will want to come out on Sunday," said Howard.

Co-ordinator Ralph Sparrow, pastor of Macedonia Baptist Church, estimates 15-20 people from each church in the Greater Kings Mountain area will walk led by grand marshal Margaret Williams, who is participating in the walk-a-thon for the third year.

The Kings Mountain Pep Band will kickoff the activities with music.

The 10 kilometer walk will also include a one mile route for senior adults.

Walkers are encouraged to ask for pledges totaling 50 cents per mile. Contributions, which are tax-deductible, may be mailed to CROP, in care of Mildred Caldwell, treasurer, 303 El Bethel Road, Kings Mountain, 28086. The checks should be made out to Church World Service.

Kings Mountain Police, the Shelby Amateur Radio Club, and church volunteers will aid with traffic control/communications and transportation to those who drop out along the route.

National Pharmacy Week

October 25-31 has been designated as "National Pharmacy Week" and this year's theme is "Communicate Before You Medicate." This message is to remind everyone who has any questions concerning their medications, whether a prescription from their physician or an over-the-counter drug, to ask their pharmacist or doctor.

David G. Shipper, Director of Pharmacy Services at Kings Mountain Hospital, wants people to realize that their pharmacist is an excellent source of information on medication effects, side effects, contraindications, and specific cautions of almost every medication in use today. Pharmacists spend an average of five years in this specialized area of health care. They are also required to maintain current knowledge by completing mandatory continuing education yearly in order to obtain a license from the North Carolina Board of Pharmacy.

According to a recent Gallup Poll survey of consumers, pharmacists have been rated number one for honesty and ethical standards among professionals for the last four years. As health care reform is in the forefront of many peoples' minds now, today's pharmacists are taking position, beside physicians and nurses, on the health care team. Their expertise can add to lower costs and faster recovery in many cases.

The theme "Communicate Before You Medicate" is extremely important in the daily changes being made in the health care delivery system. Pharmacists have available a vast array of resources to answer your medication questions. Computers have enabled them to detect many drug interactions which may occur when multiple medications are taken. Several of these include taking a certain antihistamine (Seldane or Hisminal) with the antibiotic Erythromycin or Nizoral (an antifungal medicine), or using a nicotine patch to aid in quitting smoking while still smoking any tobacco product.

In a hospital setting these interaction are easier to detect since all medications come from one pharmacy service department. This enables the pharmacist to contact the attending physician of any major problems. That is why it is important for people to communicate with their pharmacist about their medications. They are concerned with your health and safety.

Even though only one week is officially "National Pharmacy Week," the theme needs to be remembered every week of the year. For questions about any medications, ask your professional pharmacist.
