Tips for getting wedding in newspaper

Wedding information to the newspaper is often the last item on the bride-to-be's list of "things to do" and often the most overlooked.

Marriage, one of the most important events in a woman's life, should be reported accurately and who but the bride-elect can provide this information and in plenty of time to make the next week's edition after the wedding.

Some planning is required before the happy couple depart for their honeymoon.

In some instances, brides-elect neglect one important phase of the event. Hoping to eliminate some of the wedding costs, they use non-professionals to make the wedding pictures. Unfortunately, they find out to their dismay too late that a Polaroid shot or a colored print won't produce the results they want.

Following the guidelines and deadlines for wedding/engagement information outlined in wedding forms provided free at newspaper offices will help you to get your information in the paper correctly.

ENGAGEMENTS

The form - A form for submitting information is available in the front office of the newspaper. Any information not clearly stated or illegible will be omitted. Please state clearly if the parents of either bride/groom-elect are divorced. It is imperative that a telephone number is listed on the form to avoid errors. Deadline for the weekly publication is Friday 5 p.m. before the date of the publication.

The picture - The picture may be of the couple or of the bride-elect.

Black and white 4"x5" glossy pictures reproduce more clearly. There is a $5 fee for processing of the photograph. There is no charge for the engagement story. Usually, the bride-elect's parents, or in some case the couple's themselves, make the announcement several months before the nuptials.

The newspaper gladly accepts party and shower information but prefers to use the report of the parties in the next edition after they occur. This information may be provided by the bride-elect or her hostess by calling the Lifestyles editor or submitting the information in writing.

The Badgett Sisters will perform old-time gospel music and Br'er Rabbit tales as part of the 1992-93 ArtsQuest series "A Community Adventure in the Arts" Friday, Feb. 19 at 7:30 p.m. at Myers Center Auditorium on the campus of Gaston College.
