Crime program set at Legion

How can you keep you and your family safe? What if you are confronted by an attacker?

These are just two of the questions that representatives of "Citizens Against Crime" will answer Thursday, May 19, during a free, educational, crime prevention seminar at the American Legion Building.

The American Legion Auxiliary is sponsoring the program, open to the public, at 7 p.m.

A part of the program, "Crime in The Workplace," was recently featured by CNN.

Tear gas spray will be available at a nominal fee and Call Police signs and security alarm stickers will also be available.

The focus of the program, according to Jean Gibson, program coordinator, is to empower people to create a responsible safety plan for themselves and their families before a crime happens.

Through audience participation and humor, Gibson and other representatives of the Charlotte-based organization will create a safe environment for people to explore how they would react in various crime situations.

The seminar will begin promptly at 7 p.m. After the program, Auxiliary hostesses Daisy Queen, Arlene Barrett, Nellie Harrison and Lib Stewart will serve punch and cookies.

The program will begin at 10 a.m. on Saturday and continues through 3 p.m. on Sunday. There is no admission fee and the public is invited.

The unit is active throughout the year and participates in events at various local, state and national historic sites. Through these encampments group members are committed to promoting greater appreciation of our ancestors' lifestyles.
