

First Union's Eric Moore licensed to sell mutual funds

Eric Cole Moore of First Union National Bank of North Carolina has successfully completed the licensing examination for the Series 6 and Series 63 broker's licenses to sell mutual funds, including the bank's private label funds, the First Union Funds. Moore joins more than 600 other First Union branch personnel in the Carolinas, Florida and Georgia as a dual employee of First Union and of First Union Brokerage Services, Inc., one of the nation's oldest and largest bank-owned securities firms.

Responding to a clear customer demand for more investment choices, First Union launched an initiative to train and license two employees in nearly all of its more than 1,300 branches to sell mutual funds throughout the banking region. The intensive and thorough training program combines classroom and home study, plus a rigorous examination.

"Our sales force of licensed representatives are already familiar with our customers' needs. This gives us a unique approach for meeting our customers' desire for a wide array of investment choices," said Richard K. Wagoner, head of First Union's Capital Management Group, the trust, investment management and brokerage arm of the bank.

While continuing to provide customers with First Union's full array of traditional bank products and services, Moore will now be able to offer mutual funds as an investment alternative to bank customers who are interested in diversifying their investments. Licensing and registration are required by securities regulators including various state securities commissions.

Moore is assistant vice president and branch manager of First Union's Cleveland Mall office in Shelby. He is a graduate of Wingate College and joined First Union in 1991. Moore is chairman of Kings Mountain Ducks Unlimited.

Bill would repeal intangibles tax

Gaston County Democrat Senator David Hoyle has co-sponsored a bill that will repeal the intangibles tax in North Carolina.

North Carolina is one of only seven states that has a tax on intangible property such as stocks and bonds.

"We have to make North Carolina user-friendly for business and industry," said Hoyle. "Repealing the intangibles tax is one important step in achieving a sensible tax structure," he said.

The bill, if passed, would eliminate the tax so that no returns would be due in April 1995.
