Sniff. Look. Listen.

Although natural gas is one of the cleanest, safest energy sources available, there's a chance that a leak may occur. Of course, one of the best ways to detect a leak is to SNIFF for the odor. Natural gas is normally odorless. However, as Scout says, "We add the smell, so you can tell."

There are two other ways to be safe: LOOK to see if your pilot or burner flames are reaching unusual heights. And, LISTEN for loud or unusual noises coming from your gas equipment.

If you notice any of these warning signs:

1. Leave the premises at once.
2. Do not strike a match or touch any electrical outlet, including light switches.
3. Go to a nearby telephone and call Public Service Company. We'll send someone right away to investigate.

Remember, use your good sense...of smell, of sight and of hearing. And call your local Public Service Company office if you have any questions or concerns.
