County Board approves detention center

Cleveland County commissioners Tuesday gave the green light to a new community-based detention day center in Shelby and to four Youth Services Task Force programs at cost of more than $300,000 and all supported by state

Jim Edwards, consultant to the Criminal Justice Partnership Advisory Board, said the county will use $100,646 to establish a day detention center at the old Shelby Armory where offenders would be assigned as part of their sentence from the courts, receive substance abuse therapy if necessary and educational and job skills training. Working off community service sentences by picking up roadside garbage and in building programs will be part of the program which will be run by Cleveland Center and supervised by probation officers.

"This is a program that will also benefit the community and get the community involved in helping rehabilitate non-violent offenders," said Edwards, explaining that four counties had received a total grant

Commissioner E. T. Vanhoy, retired state trooper, said he supported the program wholeheartedly. He said local law enforcement and court officials were high in their praise of such a program.

"If we can get 10 of 20 people back on track from this program we will be successful," he said.

Lucretia M. Bell, Task Force

chairman, asked for support of two new programs and two continuing programs to remediate youth. A funding request of $102,767 was approved for the Crossroads Group Home, $36,000 was approved for the Cleveland Center in a project between Juvenile Services and the Center targeting youth 7-15 who have been referred to the juvenile courts by parents and law enforcement agencies, $36,744 was approved for Redirect, a school and home based program at Crest and Burns Middle Schools, and $27,000 was approved for Second Chance, at Shelby Middle Schools, program modeled after the Redirect programs. The total funding request was $202,511.

Bell said that placing court-referred juveniles was identified as a real need in the county by the CBA Task Force. She said the new H.A.N.D.S. (helping adolescents needing different services) is for students between the ages of 7 and 17 who are referred by DSS and Juvenile Services with a history of status offenses, undisciplined behavior, delinquency and behavior/ 'emotional problems. She called the program a moderate management residential program to be coordia new family guidance and support nated by Cleveland Center.
