COUNCIL

the food store and the city concerning the costs of running sewer lines but Corry said it needed to be in writing.

"Property values will fall immediately," said US Air Pilot Stan Hallam who said he moved to the area a year ago for peace and quiet.

"Why ruin one of Kings Mountain's best assets to put a supermarket in the wrong place?" he asked.

Charles Murdock of Asheville, agent for Ingles, said the new store would add $12,000 a year in property taxes for Kings Mountain and split $200,000 a year between Kings Mountain and Cleveland County in sales taxes.

He gave several options for installation of the sewer lines which the board said it needed to know the dollars and cents before making a firm decision on the satellite annexation.

The city could be asked to split the $240,000 cost of running the sewer line. Depending on water usage, City Manager Gary Hicks said it would take between five and 10 years to recoup the city's costs.

Murdock called the proposed facility a state-of-the-art 55,000 square foot shopping facility, a hand-picked site by the chief executive officer Bob Ingles.

"Where else can you get a $3 million tax base by a single annexation?" he asked Council.

He said Ingles has modified the typical site plan and he sent a copy to Gold Run resident Ruby M. Alexander and she did not follow up on his calls.

Mrs. Alexander confirmed that she had spoken to the Ingles representative on several occasions but that she didn't return his calls about the site plan because property owners had already made their decision about fighting the proposed development when 100 percent of the property owners, 90, signed a petition opposing the choice of sites.

"I'm not the driving force at Gold Run, the people own it," she said.

Murdock called the proposal a win-win situation for both the city and the firm, creating 100 new jobs for the area.

He presented a petition with 1100 signatures favoring the proposed location, 19.1 acres on Scism and Oak Grove Road on the north side of U. S. 74 about two miles from the Kings Mountain city limits.

Murdock estimated that Ingles sales would exceed $200,000 a week at the location.

He said Ingles has applied for a Community Development Block Grant to pay for the cost of the sewer installation by Kings Mountain. Another option is a 50/50 split of the cost by Kings Mountain and Ingles and a third option is that Ingles will pay the total cost for the sewer lines.

Spears pushed for a written contract and upon questioning of Murdock by Hager, Murdock said he had been authorized by Ingles management to offer to fund the sewer project totally.

Property owners Paul and Judy Scism asked the city to annex the parcel. Even if it isn't annexed, Ingles could still build a store at the site because most of Cleveland County isn't covered by zoning restrictions.

But if the property is satellite annexed by Kings Mountain, the store would receive city services, including police, fire and sewer. And the new firm could sell beer and wine, permits only allowed in Shelby and Kings Mountain, not unincorporated Cleveland County.

GOLD RUN

"We need a fourth big super market and this is the right location," he told Kings Mountain City Council during a public hearing Tuesday night.

US Air Pilot Stan Hallam disagreed. He said he moved to Gold Run for peace and quiet and to get away from the noise of a big city. He commutes to Charlotte Douglas International Airport about 30 minutes away.

"This just isn't the right place for it," he said.

"The new store would be in the front door of people's homes but Ingles has ignored our concerns. You (Council) holds the key to a beer and wine permit."

Van Wilson said the neighborhood has been stirred up for several months and concurred with Hallam that the super market officials ignored their concerns. He asked for a show of hands from residents in the area if anyone had been directly contacted by the food store. No one raised a hand.

Wilson also commutes to Charlotte to work.

"We feel that this entire project has been conducted under a cover of darkness and we don't want the store built here," he said.

Richard Rochford, also a Gold Run resident who owns a business in Shelby called the proposal a short-term losing proposition for Kings Mountain.

He agreed that an Ingles store is needed in the area but not in the Gold Run area.

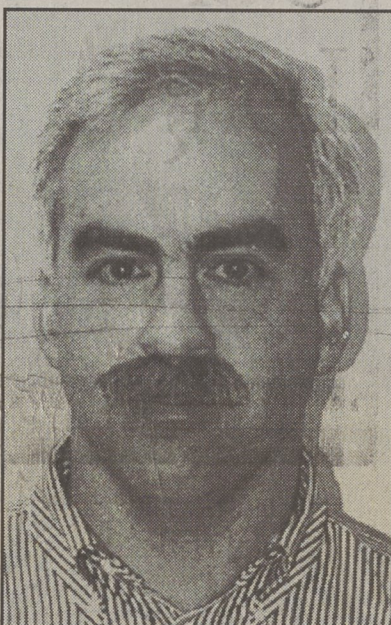

"Make a business decision, not a political decision," he told the board.

Roxford called the area an easy-going, quiet and peaceful place which should not be changed by big development. He said the attraction of the quiet community is what brought him to Kings Mountain five years ago.

Jerry Facemeyer asked if the proposed developer will keep up the property.

"I work in Charlotte too and I moved to Kings Mountain for peace and quiet."

Dave Smith posed concern for additional traffic in the area.

Gold Run resident Van Wilson is opposed to a supermarket being built in the community.

Mayor Scott Neisler rapped the gavel after loud applause erupted several times during the public hearing.

After the 45-minute public hearing there were comments only from three council members and the vote taken to postpone for more information a decision on annexation until the April meeting was unanimous.

"I would just like to see something down in black and white about the proposed costs to Kings Mountain and how it would increase our general fund," said Mayor pro tem Hager.
