cept of community, to helping those in need and to making life better for everyone."

The event included the recognition of Doug Camp, plant manager of Copeland Corporation, the 1997 recipient of the prestigious R. T. LeGrand Jr. Award for the Outstanding Campaign Volunteer of the Year. Camp's involvement with United Way includes service in 1992 as a Loaned Executive and two years as a President's Division campaign volunteer. He serves as a member of the United Way's Board of Directors and agreed to serve this year as Chairman of the President's Division campaign which accounts for approximately 80 percent of the funds raised annually. In this capacity he acted as a catalyst to increased giving from organizations and individuals while helping to broaden the base of support for United Way in non-traditional areas.

The participation of 36 young people in Thursday's program was representative not only of the future of Cleveland County and United Way, but of everyone doing their part for the community. Thirty-four students from Union Elementary School near Polkville and drummers Cecilia Henderson and Ron Feemster from Kings Mountain High School assisted Young in the unveiling of the county's fund-raising achievement.

A new aspect of this year's celebration was the addition of "Best Campaign Practices" exhibits. Eight companies - Hoechst Trevira Ticona, formerly Hoechst Celanese, The Shelby Star, Cleveland Home Health, Cleveland Regional Medical Center, PPG Industries, PolyGram, Copeland and First Citizens Bank displayed their fund-raising strategies, results and improvements. The displays allowed companies to tout their achievements, share ideas and begin the planning process for next year's campaign.

Hoechst Trevira Ticona, FASCO Controls Corp. and PPG Industries Inc. emerged early this year as heroes of the campaign effort by providing full time loaned executives for the campaign. These loaned executives, Harold Barnes, Bryon Rippey, Robbin Lee and Phil Forney were responsible for providing first-hand assistance in developing and executing employee campaigns.

The successful campaign effort will ensure continued funding of the 41 health and human service agencies

Kristen said she enjoys volunteering, horseback riding, painting, babysitting, tennis, swimming and international travel.

She said she wanted to be known as a person "who maintains herself physically through exercise, mentally through intellectual areas of interest and spiritually through attending church regularly."

Community College. He is married to Jackie Chaney Johnson and they have one son, Jack, and are active in Chestnut Ridge Baptist Church.

Johnson said his military status won't interfere with his leadership of the group, despite a military buildup in the Middle East.

"It all depends on what Saddam Hussein does," he told the group.

He pledged cooperation. "I can honestly say to everyone sitting around this table, I believe in fairness and I believe everyone sitting around this table believes in fairness."

Bolt's suggestion that the group alternate meetings, one month at City Hall and the next month at the lake to give residents greater access didn't pass.

"The taxpayers built that lake," reminded Parker, "and we should meet here in Kings Mountain."

Chairman Johnson said after the meeting that holding meetings at the lake "should be left open to discussion" but he said the city office building at the lake is not conducive to good meetings.

Potter urged the group to take a look at the lake now but both lake residents hesitated, saying the members need to know the budget before they assess what needs to be done. Bolt asked Killian for a breakdown of permits issued to lake residents and non-residents.

Increased lake fees imposed by the city on lake residents caused many lake residents to protest. Rep. Debbie Clary, also a lake resident, substituted a bill in the North Carolina General Assembly mandating a lake commission for a local bill the city had before the House of Representatives to annex the lake and water treatment plant. The city responded by resurrecting the Lake Commission abolished last year.

"It's a start and I see only good things coming from it," said Johnson.
