

KMHS students hear poet

BY ALAN HODGE
Staff Writer

Nearly 100 Kings Mountain High School students got a good look at a poetess Monday afternoon when Glenis Redmond of Asheville presented a program on the bard's art. Redmond's performance of her work took part in the school media center.

A native of Greenville, South Carolina, Redmond has been writing poetry since she was 12 years old. Prior to her career in literature, she was a family counselor. While enrolled in a Doctoral program in psychology, her love of poetry was rekindled.

"The language of my poetry is cellular," said Redmond. "It is part of my body and life. I feel like I would die if I couldn't write."

Just a few of the many accolades Redmond has received for her work are The Carrie McCray Literary Award, a study fellowship from Vermont Writing Center, study scholarships to the Atlantic Center for the Arts and a week of study with Natalie Goldberg. She was the 1997 and 1998 Southeast Regional Individual Poetry Champion and placed in the Top 10 in 1996 and 1997 for the National Individual Poetry Slam.

In addition, Redmond is a published author with several titles to her credit. These include "Naming It, If I Ain't African," "Word Power," and "Backbone". She also has a video "Mama's Magic" and audio tape "Coming Forth" available. She has toured both England and Italy, sharing her poetic vision with enthusiastic audiences in both nations.

"My work is a journey through my family background," Redmond said. "I try to deal with life on many levels."

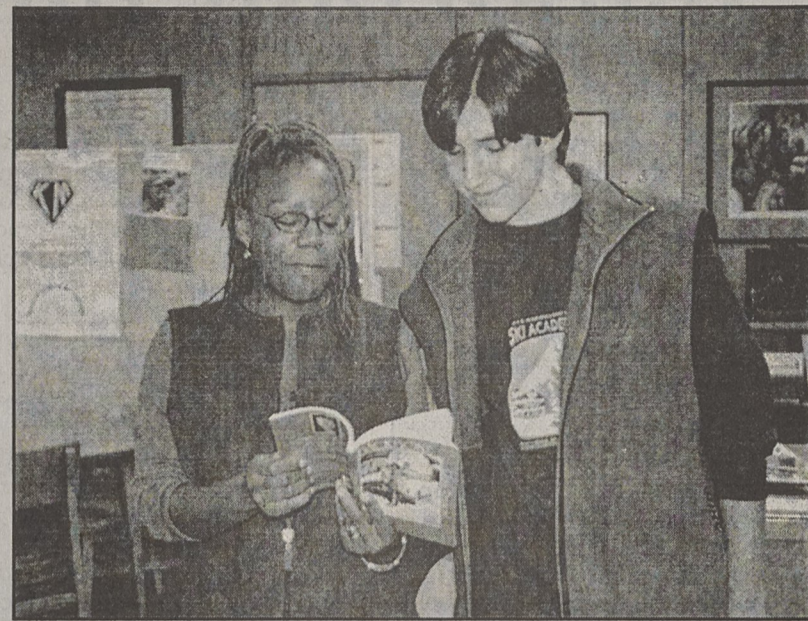

Redmond says her work is currently in a "transitory stage." As far as form goes, she mostly works in the style known as free verse. Besides performing her work for groups, Redmond is also involved in an after school program for teens in Asheville known as Project Steam. That assemblage has just published their first poetry anthology called "Steam Dreams".

A variety of students came Monday to see Redmond express herself through the language of poetry.

"I came last year to hear her performance," said 10th grader Miles Hovis. "Hearing Redmond's work seems to expand my literary horizons."

Whether in Kings Mountain or across the seas, Redmond is eager to spread her dream of artistic expression.
