Survivor

Louise McSwain has been cancer free since 1965

LOUISE MCSWAIN

Staff Writer

Louise McSwain has seen cancer treatment advance. McSwain, a melanoma survivor since 1965, said cancer treatment and awareness has advanced since then. "Well I don't think they knew too much about it then," McSwain said. "I don't think they even had chemotherapy then." McSwain said she did have chemotherapy after her mastectomy in 1979. She said the treatment, which is widely used in a lot of cancer cases now, was not mentioned to her at that time.

McSwain said the way to fight cancer then was solely early detection. "Well I just healed ok. I didn't have any kind of follow up treatment or anything," McSwain said. McSwain said she was pleased with the heightened cancer awareness.

"I think that's good," McSwain said. "The sooner you get it the better it is. Early detection is what saved me I'm sure." McSwain was a participant in the Joseph R. Smith Relay for Life last weekend, and she was a member of the David Baptist Church team.

Health program Tuesday at Depot

By BEN LEDBETTER
Staff Writer

Health care is something everybody needs, but something not available to all. That will be the theme of a speech Dr. Daniel Young, Professor Emeritus, University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill will be giving at the Kings Mountain Senior Center Tuesday, June 19 at 2 p.m. The public is invited to attend. "There is something about the U.S. that causes us not to grant that right," Dr. Young said on why there is not any universal health care in the United States. "We have a lot of other rights others don't have. In the case of health care, we haven't been willing to do it." Young said one of the major hurdles in the United States is the insurance companies are against any universal health care measures because they would not be involved with the measure. Young disagrees with their reluctance.

Currently, there is a bill in the state House of Representatives, which calls for adding an amendment to the North Carolina Constitution which would make health care a right, such as public education.

The bill, sponsored by Orange and Chatham County representative Verla Insko, would be on the ballot as a statewide referendum.

The issue could be on the ballot by either this November's election or next year's. Young said North Carolina would be the only state trying to enact universal healthcare by constitutional amendment.

comment at The Herald's press time. In other business, several area residents voiced complaints during the Community Comment portion of the meeting. "At best it's impossible, at worst it's discriminatory," John D. Jones said about the district's use of standardized testing to determine acceptance into academically gifted and advanced placement programs. Curtis Pressley said minority parental involvement in the Kings Mountain Schools was lacking, and wanted to find ways to increase it. Charlotte Pettis said in her oral complaint to the board that her daughter had received unfair treatment on end of grade testing at Kings Mountain Middle School.

The board approved several, personnel matters for the upcoming school year. MERGER like merger is detrimental to our students educationally." One of the issues still to be decided, according to Shaw, is whether interim board member Steve Curtis and other members will be allowed to participate in oral arguments. An interim school board for the combined school system was selected soon after the previous Cleveland County Board of Commissioners attempted to implement merger. The interim board members were named defendants later but with a new Board of Commissioners that oppose merger, along with a new county attorney, has bought that issue into question. "We said they have never been board members because it was illegal," Shaw said about the legality of the interim board and the merger. In February, Shaw said Jack Cozort, an attorney representing the Cleveland County Board of Commissioners, requested they be removed from the case.

Miller said the approximately 181 students from Gaston County that attend Kings Mountain schools was still the basis of the school system's lawsuit. "This is the only legal battle that we can fight this on right now," Miller said about the issue with the Gaston County group. "Even though we feel
