Murder

has tried juvenile as adults before in Cleveland County. Young would not comment on any details specific to the case.

Braswell was shot in the lower back while walking from a late Saturday night concert to his grandmother's house on North Carpenter St. earlier this month.

His body was found early the next morning on East Ridge St.

Officials with the Kings Mountain Police Department said earlier that the shooting was random, and the suspects did not know Braswell.

The murder weapon, a 22 mm handgun, has been recovered.

Police said one of the juvenile suspects pulled the trigger of the weapon.

The concert was the last of the city sponsored Summer Nites Concert Series which drew about 1,000 people.

standards. Application and monitoring fees will be necessary, Killian said.

The committee also plans to recommend to Council that subdivisions that have already been approved shall be limited to $100,000 reimbursement per year unless the excess is approved by Council in an open meeting.

Killian said those contractors that complete each phase of their project within 24 months of its approval would receive shared reimbursement.

"I think that's fair," said Committee member Gene White. "A lot of people have purchased property in good faith. The new restrictions we're talking about are from now on."

White, former City Planning Director, said the concept of sharing costs with contractors was good in its day, "but everybody should recognize that we're in a recession."

Chairman Carl DeVane said that any subdivision plats received by the Planning Department after Tuesday, September 18 would come under the new extension ordinance.

The committee also discussed how it would react to State plans to require wastewater treatment plants to remove color from textile dyeing operations before water is released into lakes and rivers.

The Crowders Creek Treatment Plant in Gastonia, which treats some 1.5 million gallons of wastewater from Kings Mountain, has two years to develop a plan to eliminate at least 75% of color from water.

Water Director Walt Ollis said local dyeing operations Anvil Knit and Kings Plush discharge into the lines that flow to Crowders Creek.

Ollis and engineer Al Moretz suggested that the city request that the amount of color going through the lines be monitored as it goes into the lines here, and out of the lines at Crowders Creek.

Ollis said he was disappointed that there was a public hearing on the matter on August 28 in Dallas and that the city was not notified. He said the city has until September 23 to send written comments on the matter, and he intends to meet that deadline.

He said the removal of color could be very expensive for the affected industries. Ollis said State officials "didn't think this through."

In another matter, the committee discussed the status of the former ABB building on Grover Road, which the city owns a partial interest in because it was financed several years ago through revenue bonds through the city's Development Corporation.

City Council recently discussed putting its interest up for bids through the state-approved upset bid process, and KM received a $150,000 bid from Clancey and Theys, which assumed the loan years ago to expand the building.

Gene White wanted to know what the city's next step is, and if the company expressing interest in the building had made a decision to locate here.

Maney said the deposit on the bid had been received, and the matter will move to City Council to vote to start the upset bid process. The matter may not be on the Council agenda next week, though, Maney said because the city must make sure the procedure is in compliance with IRS regulations.

"We have not been in contact with the client," Maney said, "but it's our understanding that the client is still very much interested in pursuing occupation of the building."

White said before Council officially approves an upset bid process, he wants to know for sure if the client is coming.

"And I want to stress to everyone that the State Statute clearly states that you can reject any and all bids for any reason," he said.

CARD OF THANKS

A word of thanks to all for their numerous prayers, cards, calls and concerns during my illness. I am at home and continuing to improve daily. Your continued prayers are needed and will be greatly appreciated.
