KINGS MOUNTAIN PEOPLE

Humphreys stays busy volunteering

By BEN LEDBETTER Staff Writer

Dorothy Humphreys wanted to keep active after she retired from

She chose the Kings Mountain Senior Center as a way to stay active.

Humphreys is one of several volunteers at the senior center who perform a variety of daily duties.

While the center honors their volunteers later this year, April 21-27 has been designated as National Volunteer Week.

During a recent weekday morning at the senior center she was keeping records of the people who attended lunch while singing and piano playing filled the room. A native of Kings Mountain, she's lived across the east coast, and later came back to live in the city where she retired after working 23 years at Winn-Dixie where she was the general merchandise

She has also worked at stores in Gastonia and remembered when Belks had a store in Kings Mountain.

Humphreys said one of the reasons she started volunteering after retirement was so she could get out of the house. "You can't sit home and look at four walls," she said. "It just don't work. You've got to do something." Soon after she started coming to the senior center she started to

"Well, I check all the people that attend. We have to keep a record of it," Humphreys said. "Find out if you're going to eat tomorrow so we'll know how much food to order, that sort of thing," she said. Humphreys also helps out at her church, Kings Mountain First Baptist. But volunteering's not her only activity. She also travels.

'We just came in from Savannah. Our son lives in Savannah," Humphreys travels with her husband William Edward across the country in their RV and they have been to other places that included Las Vegas and Florida. Different things keep Humphreys coming back to the senior center and the chance to connect with people of a similar age is one of "Well you've got conversation, you've got entertainment, they vo play bingo (and) just do all sorts of things," she saids want

Keeping people coming to the senior center has also been something Humphreys has tried to do. She remembered a woman whose husband had died and was coming on certain days. Humphreys told her the company of others would help.
