'Welcome to our porch' Tourism Day at KM Welcome Center highlights places of interest in area

By BEN LEDBETTER Staff Writer

With a theme centered on rocking chairs, local organizers of the Cleveland County observance of National Tourism Day invited visitors to the North Carolina Welcome Center in Kings Mountain to sit down for a while.

The theme for Friday's event was "Welcome To Our Porch - Pull up a Chair and Stay a While." And that theme was expressed through the presence of several rocking chairs.

Harry and Joan Matthews were heading back to New Jersey from Florida and decided to stop. The couple was checking out brochures on Cleveland County Chamber of Commerce representative Shirley Brutko's table.

Along with out of town visitors, local people also stopped to look at the displays, Brutko said. The exhibitors can have time to meet other people with displays as well.

"It's a fun time for the exhibitors to get to know each other too," she said.

Organizations representing different county interests were not the only ones present Friday. Tiffany Mullis, with the Kings Mountain Holiday Inn was there.

McKinley Sandifer sings to the crowd Friday at the National Tourism Day observance at the North Carolina Welcome Center in Kings Mountain.

She said her attendance was more in support of the county than it was trying to lure customers.

"It will market the Holiday Inn name, not necessarily the location," she said.

One difference from this year's event from last year's is that organizations in Cleveland County had their own day. Another event was held last Wednesday that had people from Cabbarus County, Charlotte and others from the area.

Attending organizations Friday included the city of Kings Mountain, Cleveland County Economic Development Commission, Broad River Greenway, Holiday Inn, Cleveland Community College, the Cleveland County Arts Council, Sam's Club and the Uptown Shelby Association, Another feature of this year's event was McKinley Sandifer, who provided music during part of the day.

Welcome Center manager Janet Fulton said the annual event is helpful

"This helps out a lot, especially with the economy as it is today," she said. "It helps business, it helps everybody."

Greenway plans discussed by Landmarks Commission

By BEN LEDBETTER Staff Writer

A report of the recent Kings Mountain Historic Tour of Homes was on the agenda of the city's landmarks commission meeting last Wednesday.

Commission Chairman Mary Neisler said about 200 lunches were served, but exact attendance figures were not Historical Museum.

In other business, city planner Tripp Hord went over a greenery plan which would connect neighborhoods to downtown.

"The goal is to take all the neighborhoods in Kings Mountain and have safe travel to downtown," he said.

While it will be a long process, Hord a draft for signs to go in the Central School Historic District.

The seven signs, for each of the district's entrances, will be green, vertical with yellow letters. A drawing of the school will be at the bottom of the signs.

Signs will come from Fitch Signs in Shelby with an estimated cost of $3,815.

Neisler said this year's tour was a success and the Barber Cabin may be on the 2004 tour.

The cabin is being restored and is scheduled to be rebuilt on property adjacent to the Kings Mountain said, one difficulty will be getting across Interstate 85.

Recently, city council appointed a technical committee to study the green-way plan.

"I think this technical group will get the ball rolling," Hord said. Commission members also looked at Proceeds from the year 2000 tour of homes will pay a portion and the city will pay a yet to be determined portion.

Commission members called a special meeting for Wednesday, May 22 at 4 p.m.

P&Z board recommends denial of rezoning for man who has already constructed barn

By BEN LEDBETTER Staff Writer

The Kings Mountain Planning and Zoning Board recommended not granting a rezoning request for property near Ebenezer Baptist Church.

The property has a horse barn on it, and members of Ebenezer Baptist were at the Tuesday meeting to voice their complaints against the barn.

"I feel sorry he spent money to erect a barn," church associate pastor Calvin Miller said. He said has no personal feelings toward Putnam. "What I'd like to see is fairness to all regardless of who it is."

Dennis Putnam, owner of the barn on County Line Road, said a real estate agent told him he could build anything there.

He said 15 years of his family's savings went into the barn.

Cleveland County originally granted Putnam a request to build the barn, but then revoked it after the office found out it was in Kings Mountain's jurisdiction.

Putnam said the revocation was made after the final inspection by the county. The barn was already built, he said. He quit building after the permit was revoked, he said.

Answering complaints by the d church, Putnam said he wanted to help build up the area.

"We've tried to build up the surrounding area -not pull it down," he said.

The matter will go before city council at its May 28 meeting.

In other business, the board recommended a text amendment for the Kings Mountain Highway Corridor Overlay.
