ARTS

Art class to feature dragons

The rising popularity of dragons prompted art teacher Anne Mauney to design a week long class dedicated to the creatures.

They (students) love them. Dragons are really big right now," Mauney said. Held through the Cleveland County Arts Council, the class, which runs July 14-18, is part of the organization's summer art program. Openings are still available.

On the first day, students will talk about what dragons mean to them. Mauney will review the principles and elements of design. Then students will draw and sketch their own dragons.

After some instruction on how to use oil pastels, students may add colors to their dragons.

Mauney will break out clay on the second day. Students will learn hand building techniques and then they'll design their own dragons.

On the third day, they'll glaze the creatures.

Day four is tee shirt day. Students bring a plain white shirt to paint a dragon on.

They will use acrylic paint on day five to make mono prints.

Mauney is an art teacher at Kings Mountain Middle School. She also teaches in her home studio.

Her students inspired the dragon-themed week.

"All of them come in with tee shirts with dragons, Chinese dragons," she said. During the class, students will pull from their own imagination. The dragons do not have to be cute. The creatures can have some spunk.

Class for rising 1-4 grades is from 9:30-11:30 a.m. Rising 5-8 grades attend from 1-3 p.m. Classes are held at Kings Mountain Middle School. Students should wear older clothes.

The class cost $45. Payment must be made with registration. Registration cannot be made by telephone unless using MasterCard/visa. All classes will be filled on a first come, first serve basis. Enrollment is limited.

Artwork will be on exhibit at the Arts Center in Shelby from July 31 to August 14. A reception for all students and parents will be Thursday, August 14 at the center. All artwork is to be picked up the night of the reception.

For more information, call the Cleveland County Arts Council at 704-484-2787.

SENIOR ACTIVITIES

For the second year, the Cleveland County Arts Council is holding its festival at the Joy Performance Center bringing to Kings Mountain work by film makers from all across the United States, Canada, Australia, England and the Czech Republic.

Only in its fourth year, the festival had entries from 90 film makers from across the world.

"It floored us,"said Shearra Miller, arts council director.

The four-year-old festival was moved to Kings Mountain Little Theater's

"It's more fitting to have a film festival in an old theater," Miller said.

Films were shown at the council's arts center in Shelby prior to the move.

Miller describes a film as more artistic than a movie.

"They're more artful than commercial," she said.

The concept is catching on in Cleveland County. Last year over 200 came out. The arts council is expecting a good turn out again this summer.

"This year people are looking forward to it," Miller said.

Film makers submit their work in hopes of catching the interest of a representative from a large studio.

In addition to getting sponsorship from within the film industry, the arts council would like to add classes and workshops to the festival

Some may like more than the hospitality. Miller suspects some of the artists are looking around for potential film locations.

"You can see the wheels turning. They're looking at sites," she said. "This has the potential of being a really big deal."

Some of the films have a mature theme, Miller said. Most of these will be shown later in the evening. Parents are encouraged to call the arts council if they have questions or concerns.

Tickets cost $5 per session. A festival pass is $10, children aged 12 and under are admitted free.

The Kings Mountain Business and Professional Association will host a kickoff reception Thursday, July at 7 p.m. Thursday and Friday. A special matinee showcasing documentaries will begin at 1 p.m. Saturday. The final screenings will begin at 7 p.m. on Saturday, July 19.
