ANDIE BRYMER / HERALD Katie Bell waits to release a balloon Friday during breast cancer awareness activities at Kings Mountain

Cancer victims remembered at balloon launch

BY ANDIE L. BRYMER Staff Writer

Pink and white balloons floated into the air in front of Kings Mountain Hospital Friday afternoon.

The balloon launch honors and remembers those with breast cancer. Friday was national breast cancer awareness

Virginia Gregg, director of nursing said a prayer during the service attended by approximately 40 people. Hospit CEO John Young also made remarks.

Kings Mountain High School student Suzanne Berry helped hospital staff prepare for the ceremony. Berry is doing her senior project on breast cancer. She is writing a paper on detection and prognosis. "It effects a lot of people," Berry said.

Earlier this week, the radiology department held a reception to celebrate its new mammogram machine. The hospital does 10 to 12 mammograms each day.

KMHS cheerleaders set fund raiser at McDonald's

The Kings Mountain High competition team cheerleaders are trying to raise money to help send them to all of their competitions this year.

They will be working at McDonald's at KM Plaza Tuesday, October 28 from 5-8 p.m.

A portion of the proceeds during those hours will help the cheerleaders meet their goal of raising $400. No drive thru orders will count toward the cheerleaders' profits.

The competition team will be competing at Gardner-Webb University on Saturday, Nov. 22 and eventually at the State Championship in February.
