Reader disagrees with column on homosexuality

Andie Brymer had one thing correct in her Herald article regarding our opposition to homosexuality - she "does not understand it."

Her personal interpretation of the Bible was amusing, since it is in direct opposition to the interpretation of biblical scholars and theologians and most people who can read.

Among other things, Andie doesn't understand that homosexuality in itself is a pagan ritual. She states that her siblings are gay and lesbian, which may explain her viewpoint. However, her lack of understanding of, and respect for the mores and morality of the community in which she lives reveals a shallowness which is exposed in her drivel. Left wing liberals who wish to undermine biblical teachings must still consider the effect of homosexual behavior. Kings Mountain has its own tragic examples of homosexual deviants preying on children; the recent national court cases. against homosexual priests and of course AIDS - just a few of the results which mandate that our society must not condone this deviant, repugnant behavior.

(Note - Andie Brymer's column did not state that her "siblings" are gay and lesbian. It used the term "brothers and sisters," in a universal context that regards all human beings as brothers and sisters).

Letters to the Publisher

Address all letters to Mike Blanton, Publisher, P.O. Box 769, Kings Mountain, NC 28086. All letters must be signed in ink and include name, address and telephone number of the writer.

Deadline is 12 noon Monday.

Hundreds of Kings Mountain students and parents attended the students' art show Thursday at the Harris Children's Wing of Mauney Memorial Library. Part of the proceeds from the sale went to the library for children's educational programs.

their lives to come to America. Their accidents of birth weren't as kind as mine.

While it is easy to blame immigrants for all kinds of economic woes, they are merely doing what the ancestors of many of us did over 200 years ago.

The new immigrants are searching for the good life, something many of us were born with. When I see folks who are new to our country, I think about that first Thanksgiving

If my history teachers were correct, it was a celebration between the Native Americans and Pilgrims. The new folks showed their appreciation to the locals for helping them survive in an unfamiliar climate.

While today's immigrants are not struggling with growiff or fire fighters, the best way to do so is to call the local department and ask how you can donate directly to them.

Ask for something in return. If you are interested in donating to a charity that contacts you, ask to receive written information about the percentage of your donation that benefits the charity and how the charity plans to spend your money. You can verify what they tell you by contacting the Secretary of State's office. If the charity isn't willing to send you the detailed information you seek, think twice about sending them a contribution. Give to someone whose work you know. If you've helped out as a volunteer, seen the charitable organization's work first hand or checked out their track record for doing good, you'll have a better sense of how they operate and how your donation will help. Know how to spot a fraud. Telemarketers who refuse to answer your questions, offer to pick up your donation or pressure you for a credit card number may be up to no good. If you suspect telemarketing fraud, let my Consumer Protection Division know by calling (877)-5-NO-SCAM. When you get a call from an unknown telemarketer, never, ever, give out your credit card or bank number. If you decide to make a contribution, it is bet to write a check.

Get the tax facts. Not all contributions to non-profits are tax deductible. Some gifts that appear to be for benevolent purposes actually benefit for-profit companies. For example, small businesses are often asked to place ads in publications as ing and gathering food in a strange land, they are facing other obstacles. Learning a new language and culture is obviously hard but so is thriving in a land where you are not so sure of your welcome.

As we celebrate Thanksgiving and move into the Christmas season, let's remember to open our hearts to the new pilgrims on the block.

I'm thankful for family good friends, church family and neighbors who are caring and compassionate and are always there when you need them. たけたけ

Even though it's not a mansion - and it's not a shack either - I'm thankful for a home. And, yes, I'm thankful for the TV remote too. And a high school football game to go to every Friday night. I don't know of anywhere I'd rather spend a fall Friday night than on the sidelines of John Gamble Stadium.

I'm thankful for my immediate family, and I give thanks every day for the two most precious grandchildren on earth and one that has gone on to Heaven. I wish I had a dozen more but my children keep telling me I'll have to have them myself. I don't think that's going to happen, but if it does I'll be famous and after all the book and movie royalties come in I'll share it will my readers (both of you!).

a way to help worthy causes. However, these magazines may be published by for-profit publishers. Also, tax-exempt is not the same as tax deductible. If an organization is tax-exempt, that simply means it does not have to pay taxes. It does not necessarily mean that your donation can be deducted from your taxes.
